DEMAND GREECE DISBAND ITS ARMY

DEMOCRATS ON DEFENSIVE IN 1916 STRUGGLE

G. O. P. Masses Its Forces for Assault on Wilson's Party.

POLICIES ARE ASSAILED

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—The battle lines in the struggle for the presidency next year, which promises to be one of the greatest political contests in a generation, are becoming clearly discernible.

With waning popular support, as registered by the Democratic reverses of the 1914 and 1915 elections, the Wilson administration is now fighting on the defensive, and in the face of a possible party split threatened by the opposition of former Secretary of State Bryan to the president's policies.

With the Progressives flocking back to the Republican fold, the opposition to the party in power is becoming solidified, and the criticism of the administration crystallized.

The platform on which the Republicans will conduct their fight is rapidly taking shape—more rapidly, in fact, than their selection of a candidate.

Weeks Is Leading Aspirant.

Senator Weeks of Massachusetts is now the leading aspirant to the Republican nomination. The Elihu Root boom has suffered a setback because of the growing conviction of Republicans that the nomination of the former New York senator would not promote party unity.

Root's participation in the disfranchisement of the progressive Republicans in the convention of 1912 still rankles in the minds of the party members west of the Alleghenies. The prestige of Mr. Root also was injured by the rejection of the New York constitution, which was, in a sense, a personal defeat for its chief sponsor.

The principal western candidates for the nomination are Senators Sherman of Illinois and Cummins of Iowa and former Senator Burton of Ohio. Senator Borah insists he is not a candidate and has discouraged his friends from initiating any canvass in his behalf.

Roosevelt to Enter Race?

In the offing of Republican politics are former President Roosevelt, whose intentions have not been clearly defined, though his followers in some states are preparing to place his name on the Republican primary tickets, and Associate Justice Hughes of the United States Supreme court, who, despite his refusal to become a candidate for the nomination, may be drafted by the convention to lead the party.

Although there is ample evidence in many sections of the country of the waning popularity of the president and although Mr. Bryan is attacking the administration so vigorously that many Democrats believe he intends to become a candidate himself, it still appears probable that Mr. Wilson will be renominated.

Speaker Clark, who will never forgive Bryan for ruining his chance of nomination at Baltimore in 1912, will not be a candidate. He views the situation as he did last year, when he said:

"If President Wilson makes a success of his administration he will be renominated and reëlected in 1916, but if he makes a failure, which God forbid, the nomination will not be worth having."

The Democratic leaders are greatly wor-

GROOM BUMPED IN POLO SUES STACK FOR $10,000.

Tom Croan, Who Tried to "Pinch Hit" in Wheaton Match, Declares He Was Laid Out Four Months.

Tom Croan's lawyer says a polo game is the cause of the $10,000 suit which Tom filed yesterday against J. Langford Stack, president of the Stack advertising agency, and Harold Hayes.

Tom, according to the explanation, is a groom. He was employed at Mr. Stack's Wheaton home. His especial job was taking care of Mr. Stack's polo ponies.

One day a polo game was to be played, and there weren't enough men to play. So Tom was requisitioned. During the game, it is said, Mr. Hayes' pony collided with Tom's pony, and Tom rested for four months.

DEAD STRANGER UNCLAIMED.

No Clew to Identity of Man Picked Up on C., B. & Q. Tracks at Abington, Ill., 10 Days Ago.

Abington, Ill., Nov. 20.—Ten days ago a stranger was picked up dead by the police on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy tracks here. All efforts to identify him have failed.

He is 5 feet 6 inches in height, weighs 155 pounds, has dark auburn hair, and is about 30 years old. A heart with a sword and cross running through it, with an anchor at the bottom of it, is tattooed on his right arm. Above the heart are the letters L. McL. and below them the letters X. F. On the left arm the letters L. M. are tattooed.

Previous to the finding of the body he had been held as insane by the police. He appeared to get better and was released. He told the police he worked in Dubuque, Ia., for a contractor named Thompson. He wore a suit sold by a La Crosse, Wis., firm and in his pocket was a glycerin label bearing the name St. John, Druggist, Dodgeville, Wis.

THOMPSON QUITS PRESIDENCY RACE

Mayor Will File Declination to Get Name Off Nebraska Ticket.

Mayor William Hale Thompson quit running for the Republican nomination for president just about as soon as he got good and well started.

He waited no longer than to wave a "Big Bill" hat and to sweep a "Big Bill" smile over a delegation of glad handers at the Santa Fé station yesterday noon, to kick his own presidential boom into the wastebasket.

"I thought first they were kidding me," Mayor Thompson said, when he talked of the Friday night Kansas City banquet, where a telegram was read from Nebraska announcing that Chicago's mayor's name had been legally filed as a candidate against Henry D. Estabrook.

He'll File Declination.

"I shall lose no time in filing a formal declination, if one is necessary, to keep my name from the Nebraska primary ballot," Mayor Thompson said. "I am not a candidate for president, pleasant as may be the suggestions that have been made by friends.

"You may say, if such a statement is necessary, that the filing of my name was without my knowledge or consent, and I shall use such legal methods as may be required to stop this matter immediately. I, personally, am committed to the candidacy of Senator Sherman. Illinois undoubtedly will be a unit for him and I am for Sherman."

"Dark Horse Chance Only."

Thompson boosters were not flustered by the definite statement from the mayor. His intimate political friends realize, if current political dope is good for anything, that the mayor's chances for a presidential nomination are founded chiefly upon his ability to show as a dark horse in a national convention deadlock, particularly if the national convention is held in Chicago.

Football Stand Falls with 3,000 at Madison Game

Only Ten Persons Injured When Bleachers Give Way.

CHICAGOAN IS HURT

Madison, Wis., Nov. 20.—Nothing short of a miracle averted a catastrophe at Camp Randall this afternoon when two sections of the north circus bleachers collapsed under the weight of 3,000 spectators at the Minnesota-Wisconsin football game. According to reports from local hospitals, ten persons were injured, none of them fatally. The list is incomplete, as many of the injured were taken to their homes in ambulances. From latest reports the injured were:

Agnes Elliott, Madison, back seriously injured.

A. Gloger, Watertown, injured spine.

Mrs. Frank L. Gilbert, shock.

Carrie Smith, Janesville, wrenched ankle.

R. A. Roberts, Racine, ankle broken.

Miss M. Royce, Janesville, bruised.

W. R. Tanner, Madison, bruised.

J. H. Rhodes, Chicago, shoulder wrenched.

Mrs. Bernice Gether, Madison, bruised hip.

Stands Go Down Slowly.

The bleachers were temporary stands erected for the football game. Every inch was weighed down with humanity. The accident came shortly after the start of the second period

A Wisconsin gain brought the grand stand rooters to their feet. It first appeared that the bleacher rooters across the field had started to stand up, but the cheers of the immense throng turned to agonized groans when it became apparent that the stands were collapsing. The stands went down like a wave, starting at the north eend and sinking slowly, foot by foot.

As the top seats of the stands were thirty feet from the ground it was the general impression thata hundreds had been killed. That they were not is attributed to the fact that the supports first broke inthe center of the bleachers and the upper portions fell forward.

Crowd Pours Over Field.

In an instant the 18,000 crowd was pouring out of the stands. It soon became apparent, however, that no one had been killed, although many of the occupants of the bleachers were virtually buried beneath a mass of heavy timbers.

Three minutes after the accident the game was resumed. The occupants of the other blacher stands went back to their seats and refused to leave them despite warnings that the same thing was likely to occur.

Van Hise Aids Injured.

President Charles R. Van Hise of the University of Wisconsin and Dr. Gilbert E. Saman of Milwaukee were among the first to reach the wreckage and aid the injured.

President Van Hise said tonight that the bleachers had been rented from a Chicago firm and erected under a guarantee by the firm. He said an investigation would be made in an effort to fix the blame for the accident.

OPERATION ON HEART O. K.

Pericardium Pierced, but Boy Is on Way to Recovery in Remarkable Case.

After lying exposed for ten days at the Presbyterian hospital, 10 year old Joe Parenti's heart was covered up again Friday and the boy is said to be on the way to recovery. The pericardium—the sack about the heart—had been diseased, and it was found necessary to saw through the ribs, push aside a lung, and pierce the pericardium with drain tubes. The operating surgeon insisted his name should not be made public, but other physicians said 85 per cent of such cases fail to survive and that the operation had been one of the most remarkable ever performed in Chicago.

HUNT WRITER OF "TRIBUNE" IN WAR ZONE

HOME IS IN CHICAGO.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Four governments have taken up the search for Mrs. Walter Farwell of Chicago, the correspondent of THE TRIBUNE whose letters and dispatches from the war zone have appeared under the name of Mildred Farwell.

The United States, Germany, Greece, and Bulgaria, at the request of THE TRIBUNE, have undertaken to find and protect Mrs. Farwell, whose presence at Monastir, Serbia, was reported a few days ago by John T. McCutcheon, THE TRIBUNE cartoonist-correspondent.

Nothing has been heard from Mrs. Farwell for several days, and considerable anxiety concerning her safety is entertained. Monastir is the scene of one of the most thrilling acts in the great war drama. Its capture by the Bulgarian army has been reported, but the intelligence has not been confirmed. Whether Mrs. Farwell is now within the lines of the Austro-German-Bulgarian forces or has retreated with the Serbians or the Anglo-French army is not known.

Wide Search Is Ordered.

At the instance of THE TRIBUNE, Secretary of State Lansing caused the immediate dispatch of the following message to John Kehl, American consul at Saloniki, Greece:

"Report whereabouts and safety of Mrs. Walter Farwell, correspondent of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, writing under name of Mildred Farwell. Was at Monastir week ago. Send courier if necessary and spare no expense to obtain information."

State department officials in touch with developments in the near east said that the best chance of obtaining information concerning Mrs. Farwell is offered by the facilities of the American consul at Saloniki.

If Monastir is still in the hands of the allies, the state department believes that there will be no difficulty in learning the whereabouts of Mrs. Farwell without delay.

May Be Guest of Germans.

If, however, Monastir has fallen into the hands of the armies of the central empires, as now seems possible, Mrs. Farwell may be the guest of the victors. THE TRIBUNE, therefore, has taken steps to obtain information concerning her through the German and Bulgarian governments.

At the request of THE TRIBUNE, Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, dispatched a wireless message to the Berlin foreign office similar to the inquiry made by the state department. The German foreign office will obtain a report from the army powers at the front in the southwestern Serbia theater showing whether Mrs. Farwell now is within the German or Bulgarian lines.

M. Stephan Panaretoff, the Bulgarian minister, sent a similar message to the foreign office at Sofia. He said he believed it likely that if Mrs. Farwell remained in Monastir she probably is now within the Bulgarian lines and possibly on the way to Sofia.

May Have Made Escape.

Monastir is only a few miles north of the boundary of Greece. The state department deemed it possible that Mrs. Farwell, finding the capture of Monastir impending and the railroad to Saloniki monopolized by the French and English armies, had made her way south into Greece.

Mr. A. Vouros, the Greek chargé d'affairs, at the request of THE TRIBUNE, dispatched a cablegram to the Athens government requesting that every possible endeavor be made to locate Mrs. Farwell and to provide for her ample protection and facilities to communicate with THE TRIBUNE.

On account of the interruption in cable communication with the Balkan countries since the spread of the war into that quarter of Europe it may be several days before any reply is received to the messages sent by the state department, the Bulgarian minister and the Greek chargé say. An earlier reply is likely to be received from the German government for

French Transport Is Reported Sunk with 800 Troops

SMALL NUMBER SAVED

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The French transport Calvades with 800 French soldiers on board has been sunk in the Mediterranean sea by a submarine of unknown nationality, according to a dispatch to the London Star.

The loss of life was heavy. Fifty-three survivors were picked up by the British ship Lady Plymouth. They were found clinging to wreckage and lifeboats.

The soldiers on the transport were returning home after long service in the trenches on the Gallipoli peninsula.

IT STILL WORKS HERE: THAT OLD PACKAGE GAME.

Spanish Confidence Men Put Their Money with Trusting Stranger and Even Let Him Carry It.

The two Spaniards who swindled a janitor living in Clybourn avenue out of his life savings of $400 about two months ago and fleeced another man out of $60 at Blue Island avenue and South Halsted street two weeks ago, found another victim in Charles Kerschbaum, 1541 West Fifty-first street. He told the police yesterday he had lost his savings of $175 and 200 crowns in Austrian money.

Kerschbaum said he met the men at Wells street and West Chicago avenue and that they told him they were strangers in Chicago.

They told Kerschbaum that they wanted to buy tickets to Spain but didn't know where to get them and would pay him $50 if he would buy the tickets for them. Kerschbaum agreed and as evidence of his responsibility and trustworthiness took them to his home and got his savings. His money and their money was placed in one package and given to Kerschbaum. When he got downtown he opened the package and found it was paper.

ANDRADE VOLCANO SPOUTS AS QUAKE ROCKS MEXICO.

Many Towns Across Border Report Damage—Shock Felt as Far North as San Diego, Cal.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 20.—Accompanying an earthquake shock that rocked the southwest, damaged buildings in Mexico and the Imperial valley, and hurled pedestrians from their feet, a volcano at Andrade, Mexico, across the line from Yuma, became active this afternoon. The Coronado electric plant was crippled by the shock and wires were shaken down.

The earthquake shocks from the eruption were felt as far north as San Diego, and reported as of more or less violence in all parts of the Imperial valey. In Mexico they were reported strong.

The temblor lasted five minutes. Corona, El Centro, Calexico, Mexicali, Coronado, and Yuma reported shocks. At Calexico walls were cracked and buildings damaged, and at El Centro pedestrians were hurled to the street.

LIBERTY BELL IN PERIL FROM FIRE AT PADUCAH.

Two Large Warehouses Burn Near Sidetrack on Which Historic Relic Is on Exhibition.

Paducah, Ky., Nov. 20.—Safety of the liberty bell was threatened here late today when fire swept through two large warehouses within a thousand feet of the spot where the train bearing the relic was sidetracked.

For a time the blaze threatened to reach a 500,000 gallon oil tank directly across the street.

A high wind that fanned the flames in the opposite direction, however, prevented an explosion.

ALLIES ISSUE LAST WARNING; TO USE FORCE

Threat Made to Insure a Safe Retreat from Serbian Field.

KING MAY DEFY THEM.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Greece must disband its army or put it into the field on the allies' side, or fight.

This demand, says a Malta dispatch tonight, has been presented to the Athens government. The information is not official, but the censor passed it. It is therefore generally accepted as accurate.

Details are lacking, but the supposition in London is that the allies presented the ultimatum through Lord Kitchener, who was scheduled to see King Constantine today.

Insist Upon Free Hand.

The entente powers do not insist that Greece fight, but they do require Greek assurances that they will not be interfered with in their Balkan campaign, that there will be no demand for their troops' withdrawal from Greek territory, and that no attempt will be made to intern them if they should be driven temporarily out of Serbia, Bulgaria, or Turkey back into Greece.

Their view is that Greece will be powerless to make such an attempt if her army is demobilized and its demobilization is the form they want the Greek guarantee to take.

How King Constantine answered Lord Kitchener, or if he has answered him at all, is not known.

May Bring About Revolt.

If the Greek king fails to comply it is expected that the allies will resort to force at once. This will cause revolutionary uprisings in Greece, it is widely believed. There already have been disorders by the pro-allies in various districts.

Private advices from German sources through Copenhagen that the Athens government has ordered all Greek vessels from French and Italian ports immediately is generally taken as a hint that King Constantine means to defy the allies. The order is accepted as an attempt to forestall detention of Greek craft by the French and Italians, a step the English have already taken.

Must Decide Quickly.

The present military situation in Serbia, which apears to make a Serbian retreat into Greek territory almost inevitable, will, the belief is confidently expressed here, force Greece within twenty-four hours to declare some definite, intelligible policy.

Such a policy, even if it is adverse to the entente allies, will at least be welcomed here as an end to the torturing uncertainty of the last month.

Some comfort is derived here from the optimistic tone of dispatches from Athens which, since the arrival of Denys Cochin, the French cabinet minister, who went to Greece on a special mission, report that public opinion is running strongly for the entente allies.

Teuton Gains Influence.

But since it is a well known fact that King Constantine's choice waits upon the outcome of military events which at present would hardly prepossess him in favor of the entente allies, there is no real expectation in London that Greek assistance will be forthcoming.

It is already announced from German sources that the Greek government has informed the foreign diplomats that, in order to maintain neutrality, it will disarm and intern all Serbian troops which may retreat onto Greek territory.

It also is stated in German newspapers that Albanian troops are trying to bar the other road of retreat by concentrating on the Serbian border.

Says Allies Were Defied.

BERLIN [Via Wireless], Nov. 20.—Greece has defied the allies.

Summoning the diplomatic corps in Athens on Friday, the foreign minister gave notice that any Serbs who are driven into Greek territory will be disarmed and interned immediately, the Frankfurter Zeitung says today. Greece must see that the war does not spread to its territory, the minister declared.

"The entente representatives," adds the Zeitung, "were most disagreeably impressed by the Greek minister's decided statement."

SERBS IN TRAP; MAIN FORCES NEAR CAPTURE

Austro-German-Bulgar Armies Lessen Gap for Escape to Montenegro.

The main Serbian army is making its last stand before being swept into Montenegro or captured by the onrushing Austro-German-Bulgar forces. The circling movements by the Bulgars from the south and of the Austrians from the north are closing the gap through which the Serbians may escape. More towns have been captured by the invaders and additional prisoners taken. In the south the Serbians are fleeing west from Monastir toward the Albanian border, where Albanian troops are said to be concentrated to block the retreat in that direction. Serbian troops fleeing into Serbia will be disarmed and placed in prison camps. There appears to be no change on the Bulgar-French front.

GERMAN WAR REPORT.

BERLIN, Nov. 20.—The war office tonight gave out the following report on operations in Serbia:

Novi Varosh, Sienitza, and Rashka have been occupied. In the Ibar valley Drenova, to the west of the Kopaonik region, has been reached. Prepolauc has been taken by the Austrians. Two thousand and eight hundred Serbians have been made prisoners and four cannon taken.

Austrian War Report.

The report from Austrian headquarters in west Serbia says:

The army of Gen. Koevess has occupied Nova Varos, crossed the Sienica-Dugapoljana-Raska line and captured, to the southeast of Raska, a Serbian brigade of 2,000 men. A crushing defeat was administered the Montenegrins at Priboj.

German troops under Gen. von Gallwitz are fighting south of the Priepolje ridge; the army of Gen. Boyadjieff (Bulgarian) in the sector of Goliya Plainina.

Yesterday, by force of arms, the three allied armies of the enemy were driven from the last portion of old Serbian territory.

Serbs in Last Stand.

Official and unofficial information shows that the Serbian army is fighting tonight for the last time.

Doubtless there will still be guerilla engagements. The Serbs are at the beginning of the end, however, so far as further resistance in an organized body is concerned.

What will inevitably be the final encounter opened between the Austrians and Serbs at the foot of Kopaonik plateau, southeast of Raska. The Germans are at Raska, which is 30 miles north and a little west of Kossovo, or the field of the Blackbirds, where the Serb main army is encamped. On this field Serbia lost its liberty to the Turks centuries ago.

Austrians Speed Up Advance.

The Austrians were at Golija platina, 25 miles northwest of the Blackbird plains yesterday, but pushing forward more rapidly than the Germans, and passing to the southwest of Raska, were first to encounter the Serb outposts.

The Germans and Bulgarians, however, had made unexpectedly rapid progress at the southern extremity of the Plains of Blackbird.

They have entered Pristina basin from the northeastward. Pristina is 20 miles south and a trifle east of the plain.

Thus the Serbs are already at grips with the Austrians on the north, are about to be attacked by Bulgar-German forces in the south and confront a solid body of Germans, Austrians and Bulgars to the eastward.

To the west of them, 20 miles away, is the Montenegrin border. The Berlin war office believes them practically certain to be not only defeated but surrounded and captured in a body. In any event, officials said, there is no chance for them better than flight from the country into Montenegro.

A Constantinople dispatch to the Berliner Zeitung reports that Albanian troops have been concentrated along the Serbian border to hold back the Serbians in their retreat.

The diplomatic corps in Serbia are reported to be withdrawing to Scutari, as the way to Monastir is cut off.

Greece to Imprison Serbs.

FRANKFORT, Nov. 20.—An Athens dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung says the Greek minister of state has informed the chiefs of the foreign legations that Greece, in order to maintain its neutrality, has decided to disarm and imprison in concentration camps all Serbian troops that may retreat into Greek territory.

Greece must prevent the war from spreading to its soil, the minister is quoted as declaring.

To Move Montenegrin Capital.

VIENNA, via Berlin and Amsterdam, Nov. 20.—The Montenegrins are preparing to transfer their capital from Cettinje to Scutari.

Serb Resistance Ends?

PARIS, Nov. 20.—With Monastir's fall, it is believed today the southern Serb army's independent resistance to the Bulgar invasion is ended. The French and British are expected to have to do the fighting in this region henceforward, doubtless assisted by the remnants of the shattered Serbian forces. Bands of Serb guerrillas also are expected to continue a desperate campaign.

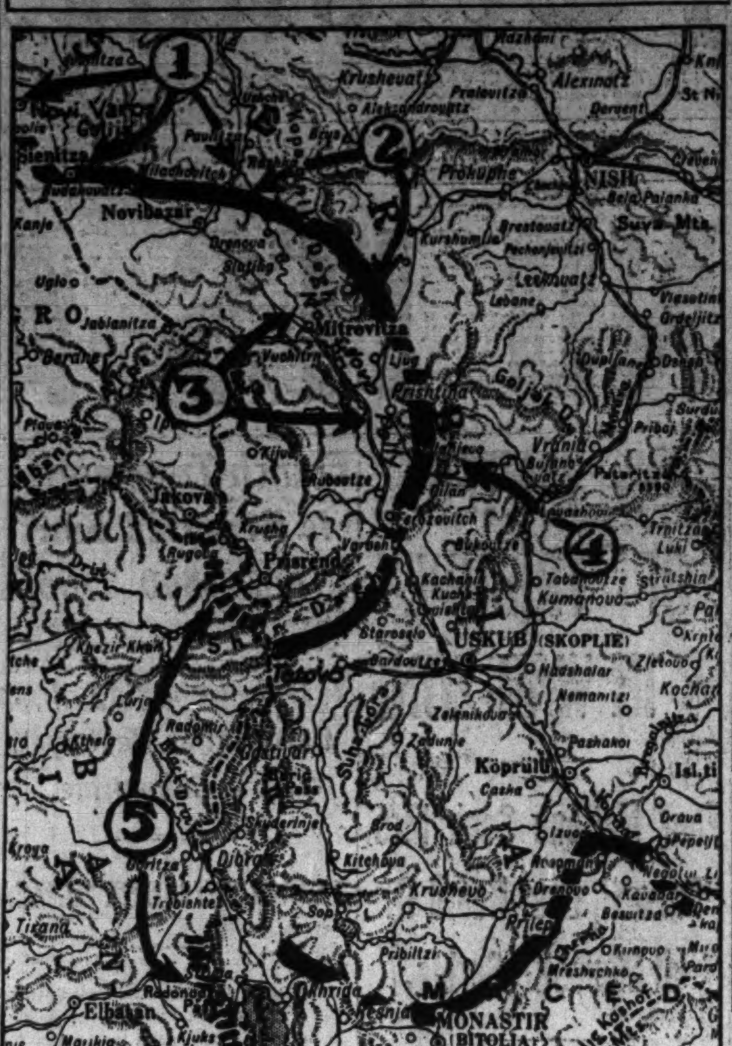
The Bulgars, advancing from Prilep on Monastir, twenty-five miles to the southward, are understood to have brushed the main Serb force to the westward. If the Serbs are not already across the border in Albania there is little hope they will be able to retain a foothold on their own soil many days.

Northwest of Monastir desperate fighting is again reported between the French and Bulgarians. The French are said to have renewed their efforts to take Veles, but no claim is made that they are gaining ground.

Bulgar counter attacks are reported on the Anglo-French force which is operating against Strumnitza.

The impression here is that the allies are not yet in sufficient force in southern Serbia to act effectively, and that their number must be heavily increased before they can wage a successful offensive.

The Battle Lines in Serbia.



1—Nova Varos, Sienitza, and Raska have been occupied by the Austro-Germans.

2—What Berlin believes to be final battle with Serbian northern army is being fought on Kopaonik plateau southeast of Raska.

3—Main Serbian army occupies Kossovo Polly (Blackbird plains) in region of Pristina and Mitrovitza.

POLICE BATTLE RAIL THIEVES; TWO NEAR DEATH

Rochelle, Ill., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—In a thrilling gun fight here yesterday Robert F. Chester, suspected freight car thief, shot William Fairweather, special agent of the Burlington railway, and accidentally wounded his partner, Ralph Munroe. Both injured men are expected to die.

Chief of Police A. G. Hodges took part in the battle, but was not injured. Chester was trailed by bloodhounds brought from Aurora to a point on the Burlington railway four miles from town, where he is believed to have caught a north-bound freight train.

Lived in a Cottage.

For months, the operations of freight car thieves have been extensive along the Burlington road. Suspicion pointed to Chester and Munroe, who recently moved into a cottage in the edge of town, where they lived with a housekeeper, who passed as Mrs. Maud Yandiss. Chief Hodges and Fairweather went to the house yesterday to arrest the two men.

When they knocked at the door, it was opened by Chester who held a revolver in both hands. The desperado began firing at once. As Fairweather fell, Munroe dashed out.

Escapes Amid Fusillade.

A bullet from Chester's revolver caught him in the neck and he toppled over. Under a rain of bullets from Chief Hodges, Chester escaped.

Fairweather was shot three times, in the shoulder, thigh, and abdomen. He and Munroe were taken to the county hospital. Mrs. Yandiss refuses to tell anything about her two companions.

Chicago Woman in War Zone Searched For by Four Nations.

Mrs. Walter Farwell

in this case the communication is by wireless.

WELL KNOWN IN CHICAGO.

Mrs. Farwell is a daughter of Gen. Robert Williams of Washington, D. C. Her mother's first husband was Stephen A. Douglas.

In her book on "American Beauty" Beatrice Cameron named Mrs. Farwell as Chicago's most beautiful woman, a distinction that was generally conceded here and elsewhere.

She was married in 1902 to Walter Farwell. The wedding was one of the big social events of the year. Her husband is a brother of Mrs. Hobart Chatfield-Taylor and Mrs. Robert G. McGann of Chicago and of Mrs. Reginald De Koven of Washington.

Mr. Farwell is a member of the firm of John V. Farwell & Co. and the managing director of the Capitol Freehold Land and Investment company.

Mrs. Farwell has spent much of her time in Europe during the last six years. She has been presented at court at Buckingham palace and held an enviable position in European society.

MOSLEM SECRET SOCIETY PERILS FRENCH ALGIERS

Great Senussi Take Advantage of Desperate War in Europe.

SAVANNAH, Ga.—[Special.] — That the French stand in danger of losing the greater part of the interior of their North African possessions through the insidious work of a great secret society, El Senussi, and by the withdrawal of the Foreign Legion from Algiers, where it has held the border against the desert Arabs and Bedouins for years, was the statement of E. S. Jones of the British steamer Dalbair, which arrived from Algiers.

Although an Englishman, Jones has served his full time as a member of the Legion des Etrangers, the legion of strangers that France keeps recruited from "the salt and riff-raff of the earth." He has served his full seven years at and around Sidi-Abbas, the headquarters of the legion on the farthermost outpost of the desert, and was discharged with the rank of sergeant.

"The Foreign Legion has been the backbone of the French strength in the desert," he said, "for the ordinary work of the regiment on five sous a day is such that any officer in any civilized army would hesitate long before demanding it of his men in a far more temperate clime. Always eager to fight, reckless and as careless of their lives as the Arabs themselves, the members of the legion have inspired respect, if not fear, in their opponents, the Bedouins and masked Touregs of the desert.

Desert Men Gaining.

"With their withdrawal and replacement with native troops, officered by Europeans, the desert men are encroaching more and more on the territory that has in former years been ruled by the French. In fact, France has not the time or the men to spare for the protection of Algiers. She is straining every resource to win on the western front, counting, I suppose, in being able to easily retake the territory lost after the ultimate victory.

"Battles and skirmishes are fought daily there of which the press of the outside world hears nothing, due, I suppose, to the French censorship. In the meantime, the frugal French colonists who have settled in the interior and have wrestled farms from the desert by means of wells and irrigation, are becoming more and more alarmed at the encroachments of the Arabs, for with their coming all their work will be lost."

Senussi Are Busy.

While in the Mediterranean Jones also visited Oran, a North African port, which he knows well. The whole country is honeycombed with the agents of the Senussi, the great secret society of the Mohammedan world, who, while not openly preaching sedition, are preparing the people "for a great event." This, Jones said, is thought to precede the announcement of a new Madhi, who will conquer the world for the Moslems. Jones laughed at the idea of the sultan of Turkey or the Sheik ul Islam proclaiming a Jehad, or holy war.

"The sultan of Turkey, the nominal head of the Moslem world, has no more real power to proclaim a holy war than I have," he said. "That power was wrested from him long ago by the head of the Senussi, and the real power rests in his hands. Just who the head of the Senussi, the most powerful secret society in the world, is, no one knows, save a very small circle of his counselors. He makes his headquarters at the oasis of Gemessa, between Tripoli and Algiers, an almost inaccessible spot in the desert. Some say that he is a renegade white man, but no one really knows.

"When he proclaims a holy war every Mohammedan, no matter where he may be, will turn Juramentardo and endeavor to kill as many Christians as he can before he is himself killed."

GORITZ BURNING; ITALIAN SHELLS RAIN OVER CITY

Many People Are Killed, but Vienna Says Military Loss Has Not Been Large.

Goritz is burning from the steady [illegible] of Italian shells. Rome reports Italian troops have gained on Monte San Michele and on the Carso plateau.

STEEL RAINS ON GORITZ.

VIENNA, via Berlin, Amsterdam, and London, Nov. 20.—Goritz is burning in many places today. The Italians have thrown 3,000 shells into the town. Many of the inhabitants have been killed. Property damage is enormous.

From a military standpoint, however, the Italians have accomplished little. The Austrians firmly hold all their original positions and are repulsing attack after attack.

Austrian War Statement.

The bridgehead at Goritz was again unsuccessfully attacked at several points.

On the northern portion of the plateau of Doberdo the enemy renewed his attacks with strong forces against our positions on the northen slopes of Monte San Michele and in the sector of San Martino. The Italians were repulsed.

The same can be said of our positions near Zagora, where the enemy, close to the street barricades, penetrated our position, but was ejected after bitter hand to hand fighting.

Italian War Statement.

ROME, Nov. 20.—The official report by the ministry of war says:

All along the front the artillery duel continues. Our guns dispersed enemy marching columns in the Astico zone and in the upper Cordevole; it destroyed shelters on Mittagskofel (Gail), it bombarded barracks at Goritz, and also swept numerous enemy batteries posted on heights to the east of the city and others hidden in orchards and gardens near the city.

On the Carso plateau our infantry renewed its attacks. The Perugia brigade conquered all the ground which slopes from the third summit of the mountain to the Isonzo between Petsano and Boschini.

ETTELSON MAKES IT PLAIN THERE'LL BE NO TILTING.

Corporation Counsel Squelches Report Sunday Lid Ruling Would Permit of Indirect Sales.

"There'll be no tilting of the Sunday lid. Get that clear." Corporation Counsel Ettelson said yesterday after reports had been circulated that a ruling of the law department would permit the serving of drinks throughout Sunday.

Mr. Ettelson announced that some time this week he will render an elaborate opinion on the subject, settling all the questions at issue.

The ruling that caused the misunderstanding was sent out as a general order by Chief Healey. It stated that drinks purchased before 12 o'clock Saturday might be consumed after that time, assuming "that no subterfuge would be used to keep the place open indefinitely by providing an unusual quantity of liquor for this purpose."

Crabtree Mistress Also Names U. S. Secretary of Agriculture as Defendant.

Waukegan, Ill., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Gov. Dunne of Illinois and the secretary of agriculture of the United States were among those named as defendants in a suit for $100,000 damages filed by the attorneys for Grace G. Durand and Scott S. Durand, owners of the famed Guernsey herd of cattle slaughtered at Crabtree farm as victims of the hoof and mouth disease.

The state and federal officeholders named as defendants are:

Edward F. Dunne, governor.

D. S. Houston, secrtary of agriculture.

R. M. Patterson, L. F. Brown, B. J. Shanley, members Illinois live stock commission.

C. E. Dyson, state veterinarian.

J. A. Mohler, veterinarian.

C. J. Marshall, veterinarian for Pennsylvania.

A. G. Gieske, veterinarian, Barrington, Ill.

J. A. Stoeckinger, veterinarian in charge.

E. M. Kasper, federal man in charge of foot and mouth cases.

C. H. Coulson, veterinarian, Grays Lake, Ill.

Ulysses G. Houck, federal veterinarian.

Merely the precipe was filed with Clerk L. O. Brockway. Mrs. Durand has retained as attorneys Robert S. Iles and Charles J. O'Connor of Chicago and Clarence W. Diver of Waukegan.

Other Actions Pending.

"This action does not mean the abandonment of any other actions resulting from the slaughter of the herd of blooded cattle owned by Mrs. Durand. It does not mean the abandonment of contempt proceedings against the defendants or agents or others who violated the injunction and slaughtered the herd," said Attorney Diver when asked whether Mrs. Durand intended to drop prosecution on contempt charges.

"In looking over the men named as defendants you will see that the men 'higher up' have not been omitted. The suit means Sheriff Elvin Griffin will be forced to make a 2,000 mile trip to get service on defendants named."

Attorney Diver added: "A host of men and women will be subpœnaed, and it is the intention of the attorneys for the plaintiff to push the matter as rapidly as possible in order that the case may be tried in the near future. The declaration will be filed within ten days."

ENDS SERVICE TO SWEDEN.

Norwegian-American Line Stops Shipment Because of Rules Made by British.

CHRISTIANIA, Nov. 20.—The Norwegian-American line has been compelled to abandon transportation of freight from America to Sweden on account of the fact that Sweden does not guarantee to Great Britain that goods brought in will not be exported to Germany.

The liner Kristianiafiord has arrived at Bergen with a cargo of 6,000 cases of American pork and 1,800 bags of coffee. These goods must be returned to England on account of an order issued by the British authorities when the vessel was detained recently at Kirkwall. At that time two American passengers were taken ashore for observation.

SAYS MRS. ALLEN APPLIED ALCOHOL, THEN SET AFIRE

"Chicken Joe" Testifies She Rubbed Arms and Then Made Blaze.

Joliet, Ill., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—The defense scored again today in the trial of "Chicken Joe" Campbell, alleged murderer of Mrs. Odette Allen, wife of former Warden Edmund M. Allen of the Joliet penitentiary.

Campbell is on the stand telling his story to the jury. He told of two hitherto unmentioned bits of evidence when Attorney Barnett had him relate incidents which occurred in the Allen bedroom three weeks previous to the fire. One concerned the use of an electric pad by Mrs. Allen. The other was her alleged habit of rubbing alcohol on her arms and then setting fire to it.

Used Match on Arms?

"I saw Mrs. Allen rub her arms with alcohol and then light a match to it," "Chicken Joe" testified.

"Then what did you see?" asked Attorney Barnett.

"I saw a blaze."

"Did you know why she did that?"

"I asked her why she did that and she said——"

Objection was made by State's Attorney Martin to the conversation Mrs. Allen had with Campbell. The objection was sustained.

Campbell said he told Miss Anna J. Emery, the housekeeper, and Walter Edwards, waiter, in the dining room of this occurrence. He told of handing Warden Allen bath towels soaked in alcohol for Mrs. Allen's shoulders when she was taking an electric treatment in bed. Alcohol was frequently used by Mrs. Allen, he said, in a bath lotion.

Morning of the Fire.

Campbell described his movements of the night before the fire and said that the last time he talked to Mrs. Allen was while he was putting some talking machine records away after the Allens returned from the theater. Mrs. Allen was in the bathroom, he said.

He said he went into Mrs. Allen's room at ten minutes to 6 in the morning with a bottle of mineral water and the Sunday morning papers. Mrs. Allen told him then, he said, to have the cook bake two cakes that morning.

He said he met James Larkin, the keeper, on the warden house floor and gave a different version of the conversation held at that time than Larkin did on the stand. He also contradicted former Deputy Warden Lawrence Ryan, who testified he did not see Campbell the night before. Campbell said he went into Ryan's room and asked him what time he wished to be called in the morning. The defendant will resume the stand on Monday and the case is expected to go to the jury on Wednesday at the latest.

AID STRIKE; TWO DEPOSED.

Mayor Newton D. Baker accepted their resignations, but would neither affirm nor deny that he had requested them to step out.

PAPERS TAKEN FROM SHARK MAY PROVE AID TO RAIDERS.

Federal Government Relies on Documents Recovered in Strange Way to Convict Line Officials.

New York, Nov. 20.—Papers recovered from the belly of a monster shark are relied upon by the federal authorities to aid in the conviction of indicted Hamburg-American line officials. They will go on trial Monday. Assistant United States Attorney Wood said tonight it was doubtful if legal history contained any stranger incident.

The officials are accused of naming false destinations in obtaining clearance papers for vessels which it is alleged carried supplies to German commerce raiders.

One was the Maria Queszada. It cleared ostensibly for Valparaiso. Customs authorities at Pernambuco, Brazil, suspected the Maria Queszada and sent a cutter out to examine its papers. Capt. Suhren "accidentally" dropped a waterproof leather bag containing the papers over the side as the cutter approached.

Two days later Brazilian sailors caught a large shark. In its stomach was found Capt. Suhren's leather bag. On this evidence the vessel was interned. The records in the case were forwarded here.

FRENCH CANNON LEVEL TRENCHES OF THE GERMANS

Paris Report Says That Artillery Duels Have Given Advantage to Allies.

Fighting with hand grenades in the "labyrinth" in Argonne and in Lorraine took place Friday night. Artillery battles took place yesterday at many points. Allied monitors which bombarded Ostend were driven off.

FRENCH WAR STATEMENT.

PARIS, Nov. 20.—The following official communication was issued by the war office tonight:

On several points of the front the concentrated fire of our artillery has obtained results of an established efficacy, particularly in Belgium, in the region of Boesinghe, where German works were shattered, and in the Somme district, near Beuvraignes, where we destroyed some small posts and a screened cupola of the enemy.

There were last night engagements with hand grenades in the Artois district, at the barricades of "the labyrinch," in the Argonne, at Courtes Chaussees, and at Vauquois, and in Lorraine, at a point not far from Reilion."

Drive Monitors from Ostend.

BERLIN, Nov. 20.—The official statement of the general headquarters today said:

Enemy monitors which bombarded Ostend withdrew again before the fire of our coastal batteries. On the front lively artillery duels, mining warfare, and hand grenade battles took place at certain points.

BERLIN, Nov. 20.—[By Wireless.]—Among the items given out for publication by the Overseas News agency today is the following:

"A Brussels dispatch says that a woman was court martialed and executed by the Belgians, as proved by documents which have been found in Antwerp.

"An official Belgian publication, dated Aug. 20, 1914, says that a Brussels woman, together with two other spies, was sentenced to death on Aug. 17 by a Belgian court martial, and that all were executed on Aug. 18."

"MINUTE MEN" AGAIN TO FORE IN RIFLE CLUBS

Municipal Companies to Teach Men How to Shoot Started.

"A rifle for every man and every man able to use a rifle."

The "Highland Park" plan of municipal rifle clubs for furthering preparedness was taken out of its swaddling clothes yesterday by an organization of prominent Chicagoans and presented as the slogan for a national propaganda. It will be the means of training 200,000 Illinois citizens and 2,000,000 men all together in accurate shooting, who would be able to take their places immediately and do effective work in case of need, according to the predictions of the incorporators of the United States Municipal Rifle clubs. The filing of papers in Springfield was completed yesterday.

"We intend to get a rifle club in every city and town in Illinois and then in every city and town in the United States," explained Samuel S. Holmes, corporation counsel for Highland Park, one of the directors of the new organization, "to offer training in the use of the military rifle.

Will Work with Cities.

"We will work through the municipal governments in each case and with our recommendations from the war department, the standing of the names back of the organization, and the accessibility of the memberships, we expect big returns. We hope to get Americans handy with rifles once again. Congress has tried to stimulate practice by offering one rifle and 125 rounds of ammunition for every five members in the National Rifle association. They have only succeeded in getting 8,000 members. Our organization will affiliate with the association and by advertising and pushing raise the membership to 2,000,000 at least.

Will Open Up Offices.

"Officers will be elected immediately upon receipts of the charter and offices opened up in Chicago to direct the campaign."

The incorporators of the new organization are: Samuel M. Hastings, mayor of Highland Park and president of the Illinois Manufacturers' association; J. Ogden Armour, A. A. Sprague, Arthur Meeker, George M. Reynolds, Howard H. Hitchcock, Ward Willits, Henry Rumsey, Samuel S. Holmes, C. T. Boynton, Fritz Bahr, and Edward G. Huber.

RUNAWAY BOY COMES BACK.

George Jansen, Who Left Home for Being Accused of High School Offense, Returns.

George Jansen, 16 years old, who ran away from home when accused of an offense at the Hyde Park High school and obtained work on a farm at Valparaiso, Ind., has returned home. John J. Jansen, father of the boy, an official of Armour & Co., living at 214 West Seventieth street, would not discuss the reason for the boy leaving home.

WHAT IT TAKES TO PROVIDE TROOPS WITH A SIGNAL CORPS

> "A free people ought not only to be armed but disciplined, to which end a uniform and well digested plan is requisite."

BY HENRY J. REILLY.

The duty of the signal corps is to maintain communication between the different commanders and between these commanders and their troops. It also has charge of the aeronautics of the army. Communication is maintained by telegraph, with and without wires, by telephone, and by visual signaling of various kinds.

Every division of infantry has attached to it one field battalion of signal troops. In peace the battalion consists of one company of four wire sections and two radio sections. The company is commanded by a captain. The four wire sections consist of two first lieutenants one master signal electrician, five first class sergeants, seven sergeants, ten corporals, one cook, thirty first class privates, thirteen privates, fifty-eight riding horses, four two horse wire carts, one four mule instrument wagon.

The two radio sections consist of one first lieutenant, one master signal electrician, two first class sergeants, three sergeants, seven corporals, one cook, fifteen first class privates, twenty-seven riding horses, one four horse wagon for the radio sets, and one four mule instrument wagon. The company, as a whole, has one baggage wagon, one ration wagon, eight draft mules, and eight pack mules. The total strength of the company is four officers, ninety-six enlisted men, ninety-seven horses, twenty-four mules, and nine wagons.

Expanded in War.

In war the four wire sections are expanded into a wire company, the two radio sections into a radio company. This battalion of two companies is commanded by a major, who has for his staff one first lieutenant, one first class sergeant, two sergeants, five first class privates, nine riding horses, and one four mule shop wagon. There is a supply detachment of one first class sergeant, four first class privates, one riding horse, one baggage wagon, three ration wagons, and sixteen mules.

The wire company is commanded by a captain, has two first lieutenants and seventy-five enlisted men, and is organized into two platoons of two wire sections each, with a total of twenty miles of wire. The transportation consists of six two horse wire carts and one four mule instrument wagon.

The radio company is commanded by a captain who has two lieutenants and seventy-five enlisted men. The company is organized into two platoons of two radio sections each, two of these being sections with wheel transportation and two with pack transportation. This transportation consists of two two-horse wagons for the radio sets, one four mule instrument wagon, and six pack mules. The total of the battalion is eight officers, 163 enlisted men, 162 horses, thirty-two mules, and fifteen wagons. This means an increase of four officers sixty-seven enlisted men, sixty-five horses, eight mules, and six wagons, which have to be found when war breaks out.

To every cavalry division there is attached one signal corps battalion. This battalion in peace is composed of one company organized exactly as the company at peace strength for the infantry division, except that the radio sets are carried on pack mules instead of in a wagon. In war this company is expanded into a battalion commanded by a major with a headquarters and a supply attachment, the same as those of a battalion attached to an infantry division.

Company Divisions.

There is a headquarters company organized into one radio platoon of two wheel radio sections, with a radius of 200 miles, and one wire platoon of two wire sections with ten miles of wire. This company has one captain, two first lieutenants, one master signal electrician, six first class sergeants, sixteen sergeants sixteen corporals, two cooks, twenty-two first class privates, twelve privates, sixty-eight riding horses, two two-horse wire carts, two two-horse radio cars, one four-mule instrument wagon.

The second company is a radio company organized into two platoons of two pack radio sections each, with thirty miles radius. The company has the same strength and organization as the headquarters company, except that there are thirty-four first class privates, no privates, seventy-two riding horses, and twelve pack mules. The total of the battalion is eight officers, 163 enlisted men, 158 horses, forty mules, and eleven wagons. This is a gain of four officers, sixty-seven enlisted men, sixty-one horses, sixteen mules, and two wagons.

Aero Wireless for Field Army.

To every field army there is attached one aero wireless battalion. With the exception of the aero part of this battalion, it has the same strength in peace and war as that of the battalion attached to an infantry division. There is no prescribed organization for the aero squadron of this battalion in peace. The war organization provides for one major in command with a staff of one first lieutenant, two master signal electricians, two first class sergeants, five corporals, two first class privates with four motorcycles, a combat auto truck train, of one machine shop, one tank truck, and one truck for other aeroplane supplies.

There is a supply detachment of one corporal, two privates, and one truck for baggage and rations. There are two aero companies with six captains, two as company commanders, four as aviators, twelve first lieutenants as aviators and company officers, two master signal electricians, four first class sergeants, ten sergeants, eighteen corporals, four cooks, twenty-six first class privates, twelve privates, two motorcycles, eight aeroplanes, eight aeroplane carriers, four wagons for supplies. The total is twenty officers, ninety enlisted men, six motorcycles, eight aeroplanes, and sixteen auto trucks.

WILLING TO HELP WILSON BUT NOT TAKE DICTATION.

Mann Says He Must Think for Himself on Policy of Preparedness.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20.—Informed today that he would be invited by President Wilson to consult on the preparedness program, Representative James Mann of Illinois, Republican leader, said:

"I am willing to consult with the president on preparedness, but I will not go to the White House to be informed of the program which I am expected to support.

"As do most of the members of the Republican party, I favor a general policy of preparedness, but what is necessary in such a program would seem to be the nub of the controversy at the coming session of congress.

"I have my own ideas on this subject and I do not propose to take orders from the president."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

R. S. T. writes: "Has any one ever seen the forty-two centimeter gun used by the Germans? Is it a rifle or a motor? what is the working range of the Krupp 42 and 28 centimeter and the Skoda 30.5 centimeter guns? What is the weight of the projectiles used in these guns? Is it not probable that some of the very long range shooting is done by naval guns on improvised mountings? Is high explosive shrapnel used by the armies in Europe?

REPLY.

Personally I encountered no one who had actually seen a 42 centimeter mortar; was assured, however, by German and Austrian officers that a small number of them did exist. Much of the work with which they have been credited has been done by the Skoda 30.5 centimeter mortar.

The 42 is a rifled mortar. All guns, howitzers, and mortars are rifled at the present time. The 28 centimeter mortar has a range of about 7,000 meters, and fires a projectile weighing about 228 kilograms. The exact ranges of the 30.5 centimeter and of the 42 centimeter are not known. It probably is not over 12,000 meters.

The weight of the projectiles used in these two guns it not known. It is very difficult at the present time to get exact information with respect to the artillery of any army. Where an army occupies a position for as much time as the two armies have along the French front it is probable that naval guns are used. The German gun which fires from Dixmude into Dunkirk is supposed to be a naval gun. The British have used a number along their front.

As far as I know, there has been very little use of high explosive shrapnel in Europe. It will be necessary to wait until the end of the war before really exact information as to artillery can be obtained.

HIS PAL ACCIDENTALLY SHOT

Chicago Man Wounded in Gun Battle by Bullet from Companion's Weapon.

Aurora, Ill., Nov. 20.—Robert F. Chester, 28 years old, of Aurora, shot William Fairweather, a Burlington railroad agent, and accidentally hit Ralph Munroe of Chicago, a companion, in a gun battle at Rochelle, Ill., yesterday, when Rochelle police attempted to arrest Chester and Munroe on a charge of robbing railroad merchandise cars. Chester escaped.

NEW ARGONAUTS HOIST SAIL IN TREASURE HUNT

Capt. Fox and Fearless Crew to Wrest Riches from Unknown Lands.

San Francisco, Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Riding nose to the tide in the bay is the auxiliary schooner Challenge, and standing on its poop with a livid scar across his chest is Capt. Fred Fox, sailor of fortune, waiting for the arrival of his crew to begin one of the strangest quests of the last decade.

For Capt. Fox, weary of smuggling opium and Chinese, gun fights with federal agents, and bored with the thousand adventures of his life, is seeking a new thrill—and he proposes to find it in a raid upon an immense shrimp concession in a virtually unknown part of the coast of Mexico.

The shrimp bed is said to be untouched, and the expedition of twelve men, which includes a rubber and shrimp expert and a mining engineer, is being backed by five wealthy San Franciscans, who expect to make a fortune if the raid proves successful.

Crew of Fearless Men.

It is understood that Capt. Fox may meet with some opposition, but he has provided for that contingency by picking a crew of absolutely fearless men, numbering among "Indian Jack," soldier and sailor of fortune, who has traveled thousands of miles in search of danger.

One of these nights in the immediate future the Challenge will chug out through the Gate into the open sea, and then, stopping her auxiliary, will hoist sail and proceed south along the coast to Mexico, following the coast line there to a point south of Salina Cruz.

There, in a lagoon, lies the reported fabulously rich shrimp beds, and there, unless opposition presents itself, the argonauts will go to work.

Failing in their mission there, they will proceed to the frowning San Balcas mountains, the hiding place of the Maya Indians, and a region that is reported to be rich in gold.

Fabulous Placer Mines.

Fox, in 1910, visited that region, which is primitive and forbidding, and watched with amazement the tribesmen panning gold in a score of places over the 200 miles of territory, so wild and hostile that only twelve white men have dared to enter it. And when Fox came out of the region he was $10,000 richer.

This time he and his crew expect to stake claims, work them hurriedly, and depart with as little trouble as possible. Yet it is known that they expect demonstrations from the hostile Mayas.

But Fox, who learned the raw, hard lessons of life and men before the mast in the roaring Alaskan trading days, is not the man to stop with one adventure, and, consequently, as soon as the San Balcas region has yielded its treasure he will sail southward to Nicaragua, spurred on by the report of the finding of a rich new quartz field.

Consider the Patrons

If one thing more than another bespeaks the genuine leadership of the Rauch & Lang Electric it is the unquestioned preference of the social elect for this automobile.

This preference is due to an appreciation of the best in mechanical construction, workmanship, artistic design and the rich coach work.

Price will never be a determining factor of Rauch & Lang quality. For the refined tastes of quality purchasers have always dictated that particular super-standard to which every Rauch & Lang Electric must fully measure.

And, logically, they alone are responsible for the cost of production and the selling price.

To them this distinction in quality means more than mere price standard. It is the mark of prestige, of leadership, of refinement—of that subtle "something" unknown to quality of lesser degree.

They are the best we could buy and write, but they are mighty unsatisfactory because neither pen drawing, photograph nor printed word can actually show you the difference between the Jeffery Demountable Sedan and what your idea of a demountable top must be, based on productions of the past.

All pictures look about alike—and descriptions read about alike. The proof of the claim, however, is in the car.

All we can do is to urge you to come in and see the Jeffery "Four" with the Jeffery Demountable Sedan, now on our floors.

Closed car weather is here. The time when you actually need an automobile most in all the year is in the winter months to come. Now is the time to buy your car—and the car for you is this Jeffery.

You will drive this winter in comfort and the satisfaction which comes from the assurance of the utmost in appearance, in finish and in style in your car.

You will drive a car which not only matches the most costly limousine in materials, but which cannot be distinguished from it in appearance.

There are, on this Jeffery Demountable Sedan, no flaps, no curtains, no buttons, no unsightly bolts or attachments. Designed and built by the same men who built the body of the car, body and top lines blend perfectly, body and top look like one—they are one.

Yet the winter top can be removed in an hour and the summer top put on next spring.

Each Jeffery Demountable Sedan, sold only with the Jeffery "Four," is built, fitted, finished and trimmed for the particular car upon which it is to be mounted. It is built of exactly the same materials used in the Jeffery Sedan which sold for $2,250.00. It has the same roof of laminated wood, the same body built of metal, the supports and sills are all of the most substantial construction, making a body of greatest permanence and strength, yet so light is this body that it adds only about one hundred pounds to the weight of the car with the summer top.

The interior is as good as the outside. Crystal plate drop windows, silk portiere curtains, electric dome light, etc., all are the best.

This top will never rattle, even on the roughest roads, and so perfectly is the body protected that there will be no need of refinishing when the Sedan is removed.

Yet This Sedan Adds but $165 to the Cost of the Jeffery "Four"—Hardly More Than a Side Curtain Makeshift

As for the car itself, it's too well known in Chicago to need very much said about it. The Jeffery "Four" stands pat on its record. Ask yourself for how many cars in today's scramble for business as much can be said.

In all the confusion of claims and prices, the one conspicuous fact is that the new Jeffery "Four" is not only the first, but today it is the only automobile of its quality, size and efficiency to sell at a $1000 price.

MUNDAY APPEALS FOR NEW TRIAL; HEARING DEC. 31

Convicted Bank Wrecker Reviews Legal Fight to Keep Out of Penitentiary.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Morris, Ill., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—"The Chicago population" of Morris, after eight weeks passed at the trial of C. B. Munday, is moving today. Munday was convicted last night of conspiracy in connection with the wrecking of the La Salle Street Trust and Savings bank and given a penalty of five years' imprisonment by the twelve jurors who determined his guilt.

At the morning session of the Circuit court today Judge Stough heard the defense's motion for a new trial and set the hearing of arguments for Dec. 31. The defense was given two weeks to file affidavits in support of the motion for a new trial, and the prosecution was instructed to file counter affidavits within a week after the defense's documents.

Hoyne and Aids Depart.

As soon as the motion had been disposed of the exodus began. State's Attorney Maclay Hoyne with his corps of assistants left on a morning train for Chicago. Pierre Coleman, the state's accountant, who is in charge of the mass of books and papers which the prosecution used to substantiate the charges of conspiracy, rushed the packing of five big express trunks and departed with his documents on an afternoon train.

The Munday family will not leave until tomorrow or the next day. Mrs. Munday and the two girls, who have been caring for the home which the defendant rented for the period of the trial, are in a state of collapse and unable to prepare for their departure. The court costs for the Munday trial were nearly $10,000.

Lorimer and Huttig Next.

In case the motion for a new trial is overruled and judgment is entered against Munday, as now appears probable, the court costs will be executed against Munday.

With the trial of Munday practically concluded, the next step taken by State's Attorney Hoyne will be the prosecution of William Lorimer and Harry W. Huttig, charged with conspiracy in the same indictment. When Judge Stough first set the hearing of Munday's motion for a new trial for Dec. 31 attorneys for the state protested, declaring they expected to have the case against Lorimer and Huttig under way by that time. It is thought probable now that the trial of Lorimer and Huttig will not begin until after the first of the year, perhaps not until Feb. 1.

How Munday Escaped Fine.

It was a strange sense of justice that caused the "farmers' jury" to omit the $2,000 fine in imposing the "limit" on Charles B. Munday, according to an attaché of State's Attorney Hoyne's office.

"The jury wanted to give Munday the limit of five years in Joliet and the $2,000 fine, but one of the jurors, misinformed on the situation, believed that infliction of the fine would leave that much less for the depositors of the wrecked bank," the informant said. "When this farmer learned upon the return of the verdict that the fine could in no wise affect the amount to be distributed among the depositors he was sorry."

Assistant State's Attorney Hayden N. Bell, the Hoyne assistant who had much to do with the conviction of the banker, said the verdict was a just one, and he expressed the opinion that it would withstand attack in any court Munday might take it.

Verdict Blow to Defense.

"I am convinced that up until the jury's finding was made known Mr. Munday and his battery of legal lights were satisfied with the way their end of the case was handled and considered," said Mr. Bell, "but, of course, they must set up some plausible reason for taking the case to a higher court. The verdict was proper; it was just, and we hope to get a similar finding in the balance of the cases growing out of the collapse of the Lorimer bank and its subsidiaries. I am not only pleased with the verdict but the general manner in which the case was handled by the Grundy county authorities. The judicial ability displayed was remarkable, and the manner in which the local people treated the whole situation was commendable. From things that I heard, I am satisfied that the people generally of Morris believe the verdict was in accordance with the testimony presented."

Donohue Estate $813,881.

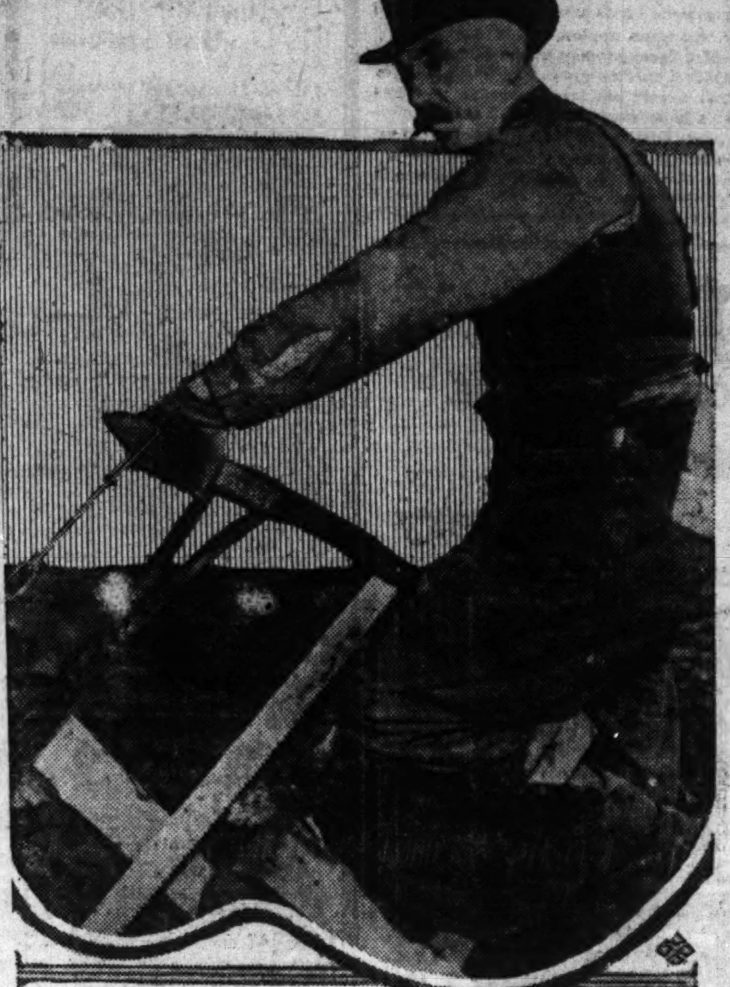
WARNING—KEEP OUT

Tramps Considering Spending the Winter in Chicago Are Hereby Notified of the Municipal Wood Yard.



When gentlemen of the road approach Chicago's more or less immaculate kitchen steps to apply for a meal, Chicago now refers them cordially but firmly to the woodpile, where they have the opportunity of earning what they seek.

The municipal woodyard is located in a big vacant lot at Fulton and Union streets. Every man who applies for lodging and meals at the municipal lodging house is referred to the yard boss. When the applicant has put in two hours' work sawing wood he receives in return a ticket good for two meals and a night's lodging.

A dozen men were there yesterday, but James Calley, head of the welfare department's employment bureau, expects the number to increase with cold weather.

"We intend to split the wood into proper kindling lengths and use some of it for the city departments, but give most of it to the poor through the county agent or the United Charities," he said. "We are now arranging for the services of a motor truck to distribute the kindling wood."

BOY KILLED BY FREIGHT.

Harry Rochinsky, 18 years old, of Oak Park, a collector for the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois, was killed trying to board a freight train.

He jumped at a step of a Northwestern freight car just west of Elmhurst and missed. His body was dragged a block.

'SPARTAN PLAN' TO CULL BABIES DUE IN STATE?

Board of Surgeons and Eugenists to Pass on Defectives Predicted for Illinois.

A movement which promises to become national in its scope will be started by eugenists, physicians and laymen for the framing of laws to cover such questions as those involved in the Bollinger baby investigation.

The first important result, at least in Illinois, in the opinion of Coroner Peter M. Hoffman, probably will be the establishment of a commission of physicians and expert eugenists which will have the power of passing the life or death sentence upon malformed infants. This body, like the old Spartan tribunal, will be the court of last appeal in deciding whether a child is so endowed physically as to become a useful citizen or whether it is so handicapped by Mother Nature that it cannot but be a burden to the state or a danger to the community in which it grows up.

Such a Need Demonstrated.

"A commission of efficient men and women to pass upon all such cases would be an excellent step forward," said Coroner Hoffman. "The Bollinger case has demonstrated the need of some such law or authority covering the questions which have arisen. I believe that the establishment of such a body is more than a possibility. The verdict returned Friday showed that there were some dubious points involved and a law clearly covering all such points which would invest authority in some board to make final decisions would remove all such doubts. It would act as a benefit not only to the community but to physicians and parents as well."

Charles Verden, superintendent of state orphanges, was another who forecast legislative action, and even went so far as to predict that the Bollinger case already had given rise to nation-wide discussion sufficient to give impetus to a movement for the enactment of a federal law covering the matter.

Approved by Haiselden.

The idea meets with the approval of Dr. H. J. Haiselden, who was exonerated by the verdict of the coroner's jury.

"Such a commission of physicians may be one of the things that will grow out of the situation," said Dr. Haiselden. "For my own part, I believe a mature minded, widely experienced physician is himself qualified to pass on such cases, but then it would relieve the mind of the community and at the same time take the responsibility from the shoulders of one man."

Dr. Haiselden also commented on the statement made by Health Commissioner John Dill Robertson, quoted as follows:

"This is a Christian nation, and the command, 'Thou shalt not kill,' either by the sins of omission or commission, should never be abandoned as a fundamental principle upon which to stand."

"Since when is the command, 'Thou shalt not kill,' the principle of the state?" asked Dr. Haiselden. "Society when it captures a man whose moral nature is so defective that it has led him to commit murder, kills that man. It kills him for self-protection and to point a moral. Society, when it meets an infant which has beyond dispute the potentialities of a criminal, which will grow up subnormal and spread misery, should deal likewise by it.

"The first legal murder is futile to remedy the wrong because the wrong has been done. It only adds another. The second legal killing, that of the defective baby not wanted by its parents, is not a reparative act but a preventive one."

Dr. W. F. Calhoun of Dunham post, No. 141, Decatur, is a candidate for department commander of the G. A. R. at the election to be held in Decatur next spring on the golden anniversary of the order.

Dr. Calhoun enlisted at the age of 17 in the One Hundred and Twenty-third Pennsylvania infantry, later reënlisting in company K, Twentieth Pennsylvania cavalry, in which he participated under Sheridan in the brilliant valley and final campaigns. He was mustered out with his regiment in 1865 after declining a lieutenancy offered in recognition of special services.

Dr. Calhoun served three terms in the Illinois general assembly, being speaker of the house in the Thirty-fifth session. He was for several years postmaster of Decatur, and is president of the Herald-Dispatch company.

WOMEN OF ANTI-CRUELTY BODY TALK ON DEFECTIVE.

Society Also Calls on City for New Dog Pound and Urges Traffic Commission.

Demands upon the city for a new dog pound, support of the proposal for the appointment by the mayor of a traffic commission, and an informal discussion of the case of the Bollinger infant, occupied members of the Anti-Cruelty society at a regular meeting yesterday.

When Ald. Hugo Krause, secretary of the society, asked for the views on the Bollinger case only two or three women responded. They agreed the hopelessness of the child's condition was an argument in favor of permitting nature to take its course.

It also was urged that closer attention be given to the method of shipping live poultry into the city and the handling of the birds at the commission houses and retail markets.

NO WEDDING AFTER ALL.

That's Reason Ruth Stout of West Elm Street Is Seeking $50,000.

"Everything was fine up to within a week of the wedding day," said Miss Ruth Ray Stout of 60 West Elm street, who is suing Arnold Stedman Ernest of East St. Louis for $50,000 in a breach of promise suit filed in the St. Clair Circuit court.

In the little drama that occurred in her mother's rooming house, where Ernest was the star boarder, and Ruth was the landlady's pretty daughter, wedding bells seemed the inevitable end to it all. But when Ernest went back to East St. Louis his love was chilled in some manner.

Mail Trucks Put On.

Six automobile trucks were put into service yesterday by the postal department to carry mail between the railway stations and the main postoffice. They are the first of a consignment of twenty-six to be turned over to the postal officials. The other are to be in commission by Monday night. Ninety-five trucks have been contracted for to replace street cars and wagons.

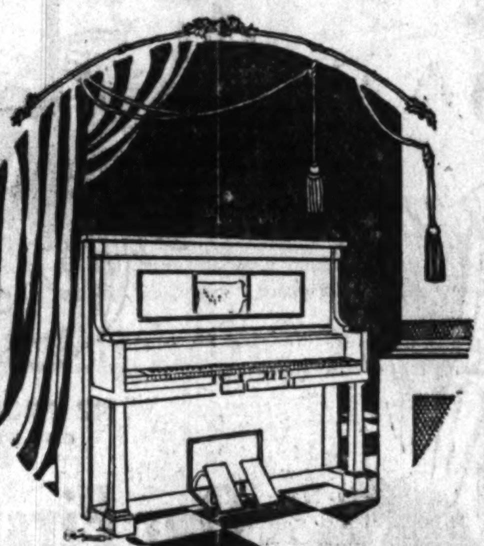
The New Way Christmas

The day of the useless gift has passed. People today give gifts that have a fixed and definite usefulness—gifts which embody all the sentiment of the giver and yet fill a want.

And the most thoughtful family of today, you will find, is practical enough to pool its savings and get one gift for all rather than a knicknack for each.



ONE GIFT FOR ALL RATHER THAN A KNICKNACK FOR EACH

The chosen gift may cost more—it may cost less than a player-piano. But no gift can better please all than a piano that all can play.

It is dad's pal when he's lone ome and left alone. It lets mother play as she has always wished to play, though she never had a chance to learn. It is a piano for daughter to play in the usual way—and, best of all, it is a beautiful and permanent addition to your home.

PEACE IN MEXICO SEEN IN RETURN OF REFUGEES

With Recognition of Carranza Government Many Refugees Are Going Back to Farms.

BY MARK S. WATSON.

PIEDRAS NEGRAS, Nov. 20.—The jefe de estacion has issued a ticket for 90 men, returning from Texas to the interior of Coahuila, this of course in addition to the usual number of single and family tickets. The added business was enough to cause congestion on the single track railway to Saltillo, on which there is so little rolling stock available that only one train a day can be run in each direction, and this train a composite of passenger and freight cars. The freight cars do not carry much freight, but are considered highly desirable for passenger accommodations and much superior to walking the track. The passenger cars are not models of comfort or cleanliness.

The train to the south is supposed to leave at 5 a. m. Often it leaves after noon and frequently not at all. None the less the station begins to acquire a waiting list in the late afternoon, and as soon as the train pulls in it is boarded by the prospective passengers. Four Americans, among them John R. Silliman, consul at Vera Cruz, are going south in the morning. They weighed the disadvantage of standing all day against those of waiting all night in the station instead of using good beds at Eagle Pass and elected to take the chance of standing. They risked a few pesos to employ "mozos" to occupy seats over night and surrender them in the morning and then returned to Eagle Pass.

Cotton Pickers in States.

Not all the Mexicans who are now moving southward across the border must be considered as returning emigrants. A considerable number are doubtless cotton pickers, who this year, as in the past, have swarmed into the Texas cotton fields and earned wages much higher than the Mexican standard. Cotton pickers get around 75 cents a hundredweight and can earn $1 or $2 a day, their term of employment lasting nearly three months.

But as the movement did not begin at all until a fortnight ago, following recognition of the Carranza government, United States Consul W. P. Blocker at Piedras Negras believes a good number are men returning to their homes, hopeful of peace. They are running on an average of twenty-five to fifty a day through this port, with many days much higher. While men predominate there are some women, and across the bridge move sizable caravans loaded with American bought household furniture, evidence of a permanent return. Many must return to make up for the losses in population of the border country during the last three years. Blocker told of 5,000 fugitives arriving in one block, and he had interesting narratives of Americans who had been in that number. He expresses keen admiration for the treatment which the state department made possible at this port of entry.

"In no case did we have to keep Americans waiting long," he said. "We furnished not only first class transportation to those who needed it to any part of the country, but also Pullman tickets, a good meal to start with, and in some cases clothing."

It was related that the rush in Mexico City's American colony had been so great that 700 applications for help in getting home were received in two hours of one historic and confused day. Mr. Silliman told of aid extended at the Saltillo consulate, although financial assistance there totaled only about $1,500.

"Was any returned?" he was asked.

"Yes," he replied. "Fifteen dollars. It cames from a man who was given that sum to reach the United States, but who later discovered he could find work at Tampico. He went there, obtained a permanent place, and wrote to me explaining his change of mind and returning the money."

Some Cheaters.

The state department knows of cases of fraud. One man was given funds sufficient to take him to Wisconsin, where he asserted he was going. It was later learned he had gone only to Corpus Christi, Tex., but there is no record of a refund. There is another case of a man with a family of ten who fled from the west part of Mexico, was forced to remain midway to the gulf coast, but finally reached Tampico and sailed for the United States aboard a transport. He was destined for Portland, Ore., which comes close to being the farthest possible American point. He was seen a few days ago in Eagle Pass by the consular officer who helped him on his journey.

Such cases are rare, probably, but it is certain that many Americans who said they would never go back to Mexico altered their plans before getting very far north of the Rio Grande.

Americans Are Waiting.

How rapid will be the return is problematical. It is noticeable that few Americans have yet returned through this port and that almost no American women have gone back. It is doubtful if they will go back until transportation conditions are markedly improved. In view of the fact that passenger service has been resumed only recently, it is possible to see a good deal of improvement already, but there is a limit to possibilities even with a keenly progressive administration and unlimited funds. And these funds are not at hand.

OZONE CARS START

Surface lines to run open air trolleys on several lines at 20 minute intervals.

Here's the chance for the fellow who takes his ice cold morning plunge and spends his nights on the sleeping porch in zero weather. It's also the chance for the man who throws up the street car window when his fellow passengers are all kicking about the cold.

Sixty fresh air cars will be put into service this morning by the Chicago Surface Lines. The announcement came yesterday through Dr. John Dill Robertson, commissioner of health. Cars on each of the following lines will be run at twenty minute intervals:

Cottage Grove avenue and downtown.

Indiana avenue and downtown.

North Clark street and downtown.

South Clark street and downtown.

Seventy-ninth street, Halsted street and downtown.

North Ashland avenue.

South Ashland avenue.

North avenue.

Broadway and downtown.

Lincoln avenue and downtown.

Sixty-third street and Madison street.

Every window, front, rear, and side, will be wide open.

POLICEMEN FACE SUSPENSION FOR 'SLUSH' ACTIVITY

Merit Commissioner Threatens Collectors and Hoyne Will Protect Contributors.

Commissioner Joseph P. Geary of the city merit board announced yesterday that forty policemen face suspension and trial by the civil service commission for participating in the collection of a "slush fund" to defend indicted members of the force.

The commission has not as yet determined how many men will be suspended, but Mr. Geary declared the investigation would be "sweeping" and "thorough." The inquiry will begin tomorrow under the direction of Mr. Geary, who has been delegated to take charge by President Percy B. Coffin.

Has Nine Affidavits.

"I already have nine good affidavits showing that a fund was collected," Mr. Geary said. "The plan was to have a collector in each police station. The contributions ranged from $1 up. I'm going to the bottom of this thing."

Mr. Geary declined to make public the names of the policemen who are likely to be suspended.

The inquiry was ordered by the civil service commission as the result of pressure brought to bear by State's Attorney Hoyne. Mr. Hoyne alleged that money was being collected to aid the defense of Walter O'Brien, John Halpin, and others involved in the police graft cases.

Immunity Is Promised.

Immunity for the rank and file of the police department who have contributed to the defense fund was promised yesterday by State's Attorney Hoyne providing they are willing to tell the truth about the collections when they are summoned before the civil service commission, which is to make an inquiry.

The prosecutor made the statement that over $1,000 was collected for Halpin in the detective bureau alone.

May Escape Prosecution.

"If the policemen go in and tell the truth voluntarily and do not perjure themselves they will not be prosecuted," said Mr. Hoyne.

"If they perjure themselves they will have to stand the consequences. We know that from 30 to 40 per cent of the policemen have contributed to the funds. Over $1,000 was taken up for the defense of Halpin in the detective bureau alone. Our evidence shows that the rank and file was not to blame in most instances, as they were coerced into subscribing to the funds, which were meant to frustrate justice."

Trial Is Resumed.

Halpin's trial in Judge Jesse A. Baldwin's court was resumed early in the morning.

Following the completion of the cross examination of Bertsche by Attorney John E. Northup, Frank Johnston Jr., first assistant state's attorney, will put on as his next witness James Ryan.

Mr. Johnston finished the direct examination of Bertsche in ten minutes. All he did was to bring out testimony that on three different occasions—August, 1911; September, 1912, and January, 1913—Bertsche paid $400 either to Halpin or O'Brien for the protection of clairvoyants.

Questions Barney Bertsche.

Mr. Northup then took the witness. He began questioning Bertsche as to his life, the places he has lived, and the occupations he has followed, and names he has used.

It was in 1883, Barney said, that he first came to Chicago from Pennsylvania. In Nashville only, he said, did he follow any particular trade. It was that of harness making.

He said his aliases were Charles Welday, Charles Willis, and Charles Raymond. Finally his story was brought to the time he returned to Chicago and entered the saloon business in Randolph street, near Fifth avenue. That was during Mayor Busse's administration, he said. He remained in the saloon business five years.

Hopes for Freedom.

Attorney Northup then questioned Bertsche about a conversation he had with Hoyne in regard to a probable release from the penitentiary in case he testified. Bertsche said he had "hopes and expectations." He said that he had promised Frank Ryan immunity in 1913 if he would return and testify on the authority of the state's attorney.

Attorney Northrup questioned Bertsche's statement that he started O'Brien on $100 a month?"

"Don't you mean $150 a month?"

"O, that can be explained, because there were a lot of little fortune tellers I didn't pay much attention to who might have raised O'Brien's pay to $150."

In enumerating them the witness mentioned a "Mr. and Mrs. Constance, who worked on Michigan avenue."

"They were people who switched packages on a sucker and then ran," he said.

"Were you ever present when this switching was done?"

"Well, I often stood outside with a couple of coppers to see that nothing was done about it."

CHICAGO'S "NAVY" DWINDLES

Only Two City-Owned Boats Are Now Available—Increase Will Be Asked.

Chicago's "navy" has dwindled to such an extent that the city now is paying heavy rental for the use of boats in patrolling the water front and keeping up communication with its outlying dependencies. These dependencies—the city's intake water cribs in the lake—are supplied by boat with their mail, provisions, and other necessary supplies.

Like in the halls of congress this coming winter a bigger navy is to be urged in the city council of Chicago.

Harbormaster Wickler was called before the council finance committee yesterday to give information concerning the city's tugboats and other craft. He reported that the city owns but two boats that are suitable for service. In addition to these are some boats which he reported not fit for use and the city's rented tugs. The "subsidized boats" are the Oscar F. Mayer, for which the city pays $1,275 a month for what is designated as winter service, and the Carter H. Harrison, rented under the summer schedule of $680 a month. No action was taken by the committee.

CHEAP RURAL CREDITS SOUGHT BY FARMERS.

Conference in Chicago Next Week Will Draft Bill to Cut Down Interest Rates.

At the third national conference on marketing and farm credits, which opens at the Hotel Sherman, representatives of farmer's organizations, with a membership of more than 1,000,000 will draft a bill for cheap rural credit which they will attempt to put through congress early in the session. At present the banking laws, it is explained, prevent the farmers from forming credit organizations which would enable them to get cheap money and thereby produce more better, and cheaper grain and other products.

Promoters of the credit organization idea point to the example of the cheese producers of Wisconsin, where in Sheboygan county, by cutting out the middleman and putting their product on the market in a business man's way, they raised the profits to themselves, it is said, $400,000 a year. The apple growers of the northwest and the orange and raisin growers of California are also pointed out.

A feature of the conference, which will be in session four days, will be an effort to bring about standardization of farm products. It is predicted that a time will come when apples, potatoes, and every other farm product will be inspected and graded, just as grain, and that the buyer will merely bid for No. 1 or No. 2. When this is accomplished, the coöperationists assert that South Water street, as it now exists, will pass away and that a new era will develop in which the producer and the consumer will divide the illegitimate profits of the South Water street man.

WAR DEALS RUIN N EX-SENATOR; WES $2,000,000

James Smith Jr. Resigns Office in Several Big Business Concerns in New York.

New York, Nov. 20.—[Special.]—James Smith Jr., former United States senator from New Jersey, and for years one of the financial and political powers of the commonwealth, is involved to the extent of nearly two million dollars, if not more, by speculative losses occasioned by the war. Mr. Smith today offered his resignation as president of the Federal Trust company of Newark, which holds his notes for amounts approximating $250,000.

Mr. Smith has placed his affairs in the hands of the Fidelity Trust company and the directors of the company are busily engaged in finding how deeply he is involved. The former senator, after appearing before the Fidelity officials, admitted that he "was utterly swamped."

Senator Smith's investments were in leather and hides, the market for which has been strongly affected by the European situation. He said all his creditors would be paid in full.

Trust Company Takes Control.

The Fidelity Trust company will take charge of the T. P. Howell company, one of the largest leather manufacturing concerns in the country which has been controlled by Mr. Smith, and also the Evening Star and the Morning Eagle, his newspaper properties.

The directors of the Federal Trust company of Newark, of which Mr. Smith has been president since 1904, met at noon today to accept his resignation.

It was in announcing his resignation from the presidency of the Federal Trust company that Mr. Smith told of his financial difficulties. His indebtedness is said to be principally due to banks in Newark and other places on the New Jersey and possibly in this city.

Big Dealer in Leathers.

James M. Smith Jr. was born in Newark, N. J., on June 21, 1851. He began his business career in dry goods, but soon engaged in the manufacture of patent and enameled leather. His firm, J. M. Halsey & Smith, is one of the largest in the world.

For years Mr. Smith has been at the head of the Democratic organization in the state of New Jersey with his son-in-law, James Nugent, as lieutenant. He nominated Woodrow Wilson for governor in 1910, but bitterly opposed him later.

MINE FIRE 25 YEARS OLD IS UNCOVERED BY CHANCE.

HAZLETON, Pa.—[Special.]—The Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company is fighting a fire at Honey Brook colliery No. 1, believed to have been extinguished twenty-five years ago.

Stripping operations at the west end of the basin of anthracite uncovered the flames that were eating up measures flooded in the '80s.

In 1906 nine men were choked to death by white damp found in the workings as a residue from the mine fire of twenty years previous. No further trace of the blaze was encountered and it is believed it raged in remote gangways.

New Official of Burlington Road.

E. A. HOWARD

E. A. Howard, for fifteen years land and industrial commissioner of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, yesterday was appointed vice president of the road in charge of all lands and industrial affairs of the corporation. He also is chairman of the joint board for the construction of the new Union railroad station.

Col. Howard is 56. He is a native of Fairfield, Ia. For several years he was Indian commissioner in Arizona under President Cleveland, and later was a national bank examiner.

He entered the railroad business in the northwest and became associated with James J. Hill in the construction of railroads to the Pacific coast and through several Rocky mountain states.

LOCKS UP HER HUSBAND AND JOY RIDES TO DITCH.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—[Special.]—To participate in a joy ride that ended in a plunge over an embankment in Germantown recently, Mrs. Helen Cooper locked her husband in his bedroom; Robert Stevens, driver of the joy car, "shook" his wife at her mother's home, and Mrs. Mary Miller forgot all about her husband, who was taken to Jefferson hospital a few hours before.

Cooper couldn't understand why he was locked in his room until he had climbed down a fire escape and bought a morning newspaper.

Miller, who is in the hospital suffering from blood poisoning, was not told that his wife had been injured in the joy ride.

MURATORE WINS CHIEF ACCLAIM IN MONNA VANNA

Maguenat, New Baritone, Takes First Act Honors; Beriza Causes No Thrills.

BY ERIC DE LAMARTER.

In Fevrier's "Monna Vanna," the opera based on Maeterlinck's drama of that title, Lucien Muratore again found the path to an ovation during yesterday's matinée performance at the Auditorium.

The cast generally was more than merely efficient. Charles Maguenat, the new baritone, took the honors of the first act with a powerful interpretation of the rôle of the jealous husband, and Marcel Journet, as the father, contributed a delineation impressive to a degree.

Maguenat's Voice Notable.

Mr. Maguenat is a singer more richly dowered than most of his fellows in the matter of voice, and of his enunciation, his sense of shading, and his unerring taste only praise may be indited.

Mr. Muratore roused his audience to such enthusiasm that he was compelled to repeat a part of the second act. And, truly, his singing here has rarely been more lovely than it was yesterday.

No Thrills from Beriza.

Curiosity as to what Mary Garden's successor, Marguerite Beriza, would accomplish with the title rôle was rampant. Excepting that she dressed the character more in keeping with the piece and its traditions, her appearance was not a gratification of that curiosity. She did not startle the prudes by an extravagant display of cuticle (the plot brings her to the besieger's tent dressed in nothing but a cloak, for certain nefarious obligations) nor did she display the vocal virtuosity hoped for. Mme. Beriza is an opera actress of skill, however.

The musical score of "Monna Vanna" grows in interest with repetition. Its pulsing rhythms and its rich orchestral background are the elements of a powerful and luscious effect. Given such performances as that of yesterday, it will be the ranking favorite of the French repertory this season. And the stage pictures surpass anything of the sort we have had this week.

AMBASSADOR BEGS SHOES.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special.]—Truly, an ambassador's life in one of the warring countries is one trouble after another.

Ambassador Gerard at Berlin has appealed to Secretary of State Lansing to intercede with Great Britain to lift her blockade just long enough for him to get some shoes and haberdashery for his personal use through from London.

He cannot get what he wants in Germany, he said.

DEMOCRATS PATCH UP ROW OVER NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

McCoombs to Be Chairman Until After Convention, and Then Retire.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20.—The Democratic family row involving Chairman William F. McCombs of the national committee and Committeeman Fred B. Lynch of Minnesota has been settled. McCombs is to retain the chairmanship until the national convention next year. No fight by Lynch's friends will be made when the Democratic committee meets here Dec. 7. But a new chairman will handle the 1916 campaign. Lynch is slated for the job.

This information came tonight from the inner Democratic council. It was positively stated that prospects of a wrangle have been averted. McCombs is said to be willing to relinquish the chairmanship after he has had the honor of opening the 1916 convention.

All signs point to a Democratic love feast at the national committee's meeting. The question of selecting the city for the convention promises tonight to be most difficult. San Francisco has offered $200,000 for the convention, the largest bid ever made for a similar gathering and double that yet hung up by any competitor.

MAY LAND PROGRESSIVES.

Chairman Harold Ickes Says National Convention of Party May Be Held in Chicago.

Chicago is to welcome the Progressive national convention of 1916, as well as the Republican and Democratic gatherings, if the suggestion made by Harold Ickes, Illinois state Progressive chairman, is borne out by later returns.

Chairman Ickes, fresh from a conference with George W. Perkins, the chairman of the national Progressive committee, said yesterday that the Progressives undoubtedly would foregather in Chicago.

The Cook county committee is to meet on Tuesday to plan for the nomination of a state and county ticket in Illinois and to prepare for the national campaign.

Search for Patrick J. Hoy.

The police were asked yesterday to search for Patrick J. Hoy, 49 years old, 1354 West Fourteenth street, a cigar salesman.

DEMOCRATS ON DEFENSIVE IN 1916 STRUGGLE

G. O. P. Masses Forces for Assault on Wilson Men; Assails Policies.

ried by the evidence of the 1914 and 1915 election returns that the country is swinging back to favor of the Republican party, which they have admitted in private conferences threatens the party with loss of control of the house and possibly of the senate. They are still confident, however, that under the most unfavorable conditions the president will prove so much more popular than his party that he will be reëlected.

With the passing of every week furnishing the Republicans with more ammunition with which to assail the administration on the ground of incompetence, the Democratic chieftains are preparing their defense. Their principal argument will be that the president kept the country out of war with Germany and that he settled the Mexican rumpus without armed intervention. Their battle cry in 1916 as in 1912 will be "War in the east, peace in the west—thank God for Wilson."

Democrats Prepare Defense.

Whatever shortcomings the Republicans fasten upon the administration will be ascribed by the Democratic chieftains to the economic effect of the war. The country will be told that the war, not the administration, must be blamed for the failure of the tariff to produce the required revenue and for the impaired condition of the government finances.

The Republicans are now opening their campaign with exposures of the sham character of Democratic legislation, of the incompetence and vacillation of the administration, of the secrecy of its methods, and of the suppression and censorship of public information, practiced for the purpose of concealing blunders, political spoils mongering, and the protection of specially privileged interests.

The Republicans, through their publicity association, now are giving the president a taste of that "pitiless publicity" which is among the campaign promises he failed to carry out.

McAdoo Under Attack.

Attention is being directed particularly to Secretary McAdoo's juggling of the figures of the daily treasury statement so as to make it appear that the working balance of the treasury contains about $100,000,000 more than is actually the case. According to the Republican figures, the balance is only about $3,0[illegible],000.

The Democratic campaign cry that the president has kept the country out of war is being squarely met by the Republicans, who are pointing out that Mr. Wilson's policy in the submarine controversy came dangerously near involving the nation in war and has left the country a prey to the renewal of that menace.

The refusal of the president to prepare the country for defense at the outbreak of the European war and even at the opening of the German submarine campaign and his fondness for writing rhetorical notes are held by the Republicans to have brought the United States to the verge of a clash with Berlin which was averted not so much by the Wilson policy of moral suasion as by a shift in the German military policy abroad.

Had the president strengthened the army and navy as he now proposes, and had he taken vigorous action when the sinking of the Falaba sacrificed the first American life in the submarine war zone, Germany, according to the Republicans, would not have dared to sink the Lusitania.

Instead of doing that, however, the president made no move until the Lusitania was sunk, and then Secretary Bryan caused Germany to be assured that Mr. Wilson did not intend to suit his actions to his words.

The Republicans contend that Germany was given ample reason to believe that the Wilson notes were written for home consumption and political effect, and that it is not surprising that the killing of Americans continued unabated until Germany, for purposes best known to itself, elected to pacify the United States by giving a partial promise not to offend again, applying only to passenger ships. Moreover, it is pointed out that the loss of American lives in the sinking of the Ancona has demonstrated that the Wilson policy has not ended the submarine danger.

Legislation Labeled a Sham.

The legislation enacted under the Wilson régime is pronounced by the Republicans a conglomeration of political shams and quack panaceas. The president proclaimed the Democratic tariff reduction a destroyer of trusts.

The fact is, according to the Republicans, that the Simmon-Underwood law helped the trusts by giving them cheaper raw material and removed protection from many industries of the north, while retaining protection of the principal industrial of the "solid south."

The operation of the Democratic tariff law is held by the Republicans to have caused the financial depression which began before the outbreak of the European war.

The anti-trust legislation is pronounced a sham pure and simple by the Republicans. The Clayton act was passed, it is contended, to propitiate union labor, which it purported to exempt from prosecution under the Sherman law prohibiting restraint of trade. The provisions were drafted in such a manner, however, that they were entirely acceptable to the opponents of organized labor and the unions do not yet know whether they received what the administration promised them.

Trade Commission Attacked.

The trade commission legislation is regarded by the Republicans as a sham attempt to steal Republican thunder. The creation of a trade commission was proposed by the Republican and Progressive platforms, but condemned by the Democrats and adversely criticized by Mr. Wilson in speeches prior to his election.

With the opposition parties continuing to press their proposal to the president after getting into office, the Democrats were compelled to adopt the proposition though in an innocuous form that promises no effective regulation of big business."

The Republicans accuse the president of keeping his eye on the main chance to counteract political opposition. They charge that he did not come out for preparedness against war until he realized that the Republicans intended to make an issue of the question, and that the country would be with the party proposing adequate defense. But as in the other cases of his appropriation of the ideas of the opposition, it is contended, Mr. Wilson has outlined a defense program that is a sham.

Army Program Scored.

The weakest part of his army plan is pronounced the citizen army scheme which was included for the purpose of making a pretense of carrying out the president's idea that the country at all times should rely for defense mainly on a "citizenry trained and accustomed to arms."

The financial plight of the government is attributed by the Republicans to the extravagant, wasteful and "pork barrel" appropriations under the Democratic régime, coupled with half baked measures for the raising of revenue.

Estimating the government receipts for the first four months of the current fiscal year, a threatened deficit of $100,000,000 in the revenues by the end of the year, will engage the attention of congress when it assembles. Consideration of the figures is entirely aside from the military preparedness program and relates only to the ordinary income and outgo for the government.

Huge Appropriations Made.

The sixty-third congress appropriated in its two sessions for the two fiscal years 1915 and 1916 a total of $2,231,055,150, which was double the total appropriations of the fifty-first congress when Mr. Reed of Maine answered the criticism of a billion dollar congress with the retort that "this is a billion dollar country," and $200,000,000 more than the total appropriations of the sixty-first congress, the last controlled by the Republicans.

The appropriations for this fiscal year total $1,114,937,012, of which $313,304,667 was for the postal service, leaving $801,572,345 to be met by the revenues.

The customs receipts for the last fiscal year were only $209,000,000, the lowest in many years, and more than $100,000,000 less than for the last year of the Payne-Aldrich law.

For the first four months of this fiscal year the customs receipts are $11,500,000 less than for the same period last year. If this decrease holds throughout the year the customs receipts will not total more than $184,000,000, or the smallest amount from customs since the repeal of the Wilson-Gorman tariff law.

Deficit in Revenue Predicted.

There has been an increase of about $19,000,000 in the ordinary internal revenue receipts for these four months over the receipts for the same period last year, due to the emergency tax, which did not go into effect until the first of November, 1914. There has also been an increase of about $4,000,000 in the receipts from the income tax, but a loss of $14,000,000 in miscellaneous receipts, so that the net gain from internal revenue is about $9,000,000, or $2,500,000 less than the loss from customs revenue.

The total receipts last year were $696,596,730.42, and the total disbursements $760,762,147.20, leaving a deficit of $64,165,416.78.

The outlook for this year, as indicated by the first four months is that the total receipts will not exceed $690,000,000, to meet disbursements exceeding $800,000,000, leaving a deficit of something more than $110,000,000. There also threatens to be a deficit in the postal revenues.

What is More Important Than Bread?

? ? ? ? ? ? ? ? ?

Carl Sulzer believes that good bread is all-important. He believes that "the Staff of Life" should be made with the utmost expert care, using only the very best materials. To prove how deliciously good bread can be, he has made

PROGRESSIVES IN MISSOURI WON'T RETURN TO G.O.P.

Decide on Full Tickets, with Roosevelt and Johnson as National Candidates.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 20.—The leaders of the Progressive party in Missouri favor entering the 1916 campaign with full national, state, and county tickets, headed by Theodore Roosevelt and Hiram W. Johnson. That attitude was expressed in a resolution adopted by the party leaders after an all day conference here today.

The action at the conference followed the announcement of George W. Perkins of New York, chairman of the national executive committee of the party, that he had called a meeting of the committee to be held in New York on Nov. 29. The purpose of the committee meeting will be to arrange for a meeting of the national committee at which a date and place for a national Progressive convention will be fixed.

Criticize Both Old Parties.

Resolutions adopted today by the Missouri Progressives included the following:

"We see nothing in the present attitude of either of the old parties that holds out any promise for the future. As in the 1912 campaign the powers of graft and special privilege are in control of the old party organizations and are openly preparing to write platforms and nominate candidates in harmony with their interests.

"We therefore stand squarely on our national platform of 1912 and favor the nomination of national, state, and county tickets on that platform."

Want Roosevelt and Johnson.

The mention of Roosevelt and Johnson came at the end of the day's conference. Judge Albert D. Norton of St. Louis, Progressive candidate for governor of Missouri in 1912, offered a motion that the meeting declare itself in favor of placing the two 1912 candidates at the head of next year's ticket. The motion was adopted.

New York, Nov. 20.—John T. Hall, also known as John T. Newcomer, has been found guilty of using the mails to defraud 1,500 amateur poets, who were induced to enter a prize song poem contest conducted by the John T. Hall Music Publishing company.

Judge Foster sentenced Hall to two years in the federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga.

Sixty men and women from all parts of the country testified at the trial concerning the manner in which the song poem contest had been conducted.

"Queen of Beauty" Lives in Anxiety.

VISCOUNTESS CURZON

VISCOUNTESS CURZON, England's "queen of beauty," is leading a life of long suspense these days. Her husband is third in command on the superdreadnaught Queen Elizabeth, which has done such spectacular service in the Dardanelles and is now with the grand fleet in the North sea. The warship is known affectionately in the British navy as "Lizzie." The title of pulchritude awarded the viscountess was conferred upon her by Lady Randolph Churchill at the "days of Shakspeare" tournament in the piping times of peace.

BODINE KEEPS SCHOOL POST.

Chicagoan Re-elected President of National League of Compulsory Education Officials.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 20.—The selection of Newark, N. J., for the 1916 convention of the National League of Compulsory Education Officials and the unanimous reëlection of all officers featured the closing session of that organization today. William L. Bodine of Chicago, retaining the office of president for the fifth consecutive term, was presented with a diamond star pin.

HEALTH CHIEF POINTS TO EVILS IN CITY SCHOOLS

Air Foul, Grease on Text Books, Playgrounds Inadequate, Some of Charges.

During the last few weeks Mrs. Ella Flagg Young has been getting numerous long letters from Dr. John Dill Robertson, commissioner of health. Dr. Robertson has made complaints regarding bad sanitary conditions in more than 100 public schools.

Mrs. Young yesterday turned over the batch of letters to Secretary L. E. Larson, and copies will be sent to all the members of the board. Action will be taken at the next meeting of the school management committee.

The complaints vary from the bad condition of ventilating apparatus to the grease on free text books. These are some of the complaints.

Air intake too close to the ground.
No provision for regulation of humidity.
Playground inadequate.
No adjustable seats.
School overcrowded.
Bubbling fountains not running.
Pencils and pens used in common.
Foul air in portables.
Walls and ceilings dirty.
Playground covered with glass, bricks, stones, tin cans, and other rubbish.

These Playgrounds Inadequate.

Dr. Robertson asserted that the following schools have inadequate playgrounds:

Jenner,
Linne,
Willard,
Bradwell,
Field,
Mann branch,
Hendricks,
Washington,
Otis,
Montefiore,
Swing,
Goudy,
Dante,
Talcott,
Emerson,

Feizenthal,

Hawthorne,
Blaine,
Coonley,
Ericsson,
Hamline,

Douglas,
Haven,
McKinley High,
Marquette,
Farragut,
Prescott.

S. Einstein of 6322 Magnolia avenue wrote the sanitary condition of the Hayt school, Granville and Greenview avenues, were deplorable and unbearable, and said the janitor refused to allow the opening of windows.

Corporation Saves $70,000.

Dr. Peter C. Clemensen, member of the special parks commission from the school board, submitted a report showing the results of the coöperation between the board of education and the commission since the $300,000 bond issue for playgrounds was passed.

"I believe coöperation has saved the city $70,000 out of that $300,000," said Dr. Clemensen. "It has enabled the commission not to spend a single dollar on land. And it has saved it the necessity of tearing up apparatus installed on leased land when the owner refuses to continue to lease.

"Previous to the bond issue there were twenty-nine playgrounds, as the result of different appropriations by the city. Work is now being done upon thirty-two new playgrounds, all of which are on school property, and the council has authorized playgrounds to be established at fourteen other schools, but the work has not yet been started. That means that in a short time we shall have forty-six permanent additional playgrounds, all in centers of child population."

These Play Yards Planned.

Following is a list of the schools where playgrounds will be established:

Auburn Park,
Avondale,
Burley,
Belding,
Carter,
Cameron,
Delano,
Davis,
Earle,
Emmet,
Field,
Franklin,
Fulton,
Gallistel,

Dr. Clemensen praised Ald. Eugene Block, chairman of the commission, for the success of the coöperative plan.

MAYOR'S FOES IN COUNCIL FACE FIGHT AT THE POLLS.

Letter to Brushingham Hints That Thompson Will Attack Anti-Administration Men in Spring.

That Mayor Thompson expects to bring about the defeat of anti-administration aldermen at the polls next spring is strongly intimated in a letter which the mayor yesterday addressed to the Rev. J. P. Brushingham. The latter had written the following letter to the mayor:

"I have heard rumors to the effect that you might resubmit my name to the city council as a member of the school board of Chicago. Permit me out of respect to my family and my South Park avenue congregation to withdraw my name from further consideration."

In reply the mayor said:

"In respect to your wishes I shall comply with your request and withdraw your name at this time. I shall consider it a favor, however, if you will consider permitting the appointment to be submitted next year after the election."

MRS. MEDER AND SERCOMBE FACE HOYNE INQUIRY

Prosecutor Wants to Know What There Is in High School Vice Charges.

Mrs. Leonora Z. Meder, former head of the department of public welfare, and Parker H. Sercombe, statistician for the board of education, as well as Meyer J. Stein, counsel for the Baldwin investigating committee, are to be invited to meet with the county prosecutor and thrash out the various stories they have heard and present the alleged facts they are supposed to possess. If Mr. Hoyne finds there is any foundation for the charge of gross immorality he will lay the matter before the grand jury, and then somebody will be called to account.

All "Pass the Buck."

Up to date, the whole proposition is one of the neatest little cases of "passing the buck" that has ever come to public notice. Nobody will assume responsibility for the charges except Mr. Stein, and he was never accused of saying anything on the matter until after Mrs. Ella Flagg Young publicly charged Mr. Sercombe with making the statement.

But Mr. Stein injected himself into the scandal by asserting that there would have been an official exposé if the Baldwin committee had not had its wings clipped. Mr. Stein asserts that one of the investigators for the committee found this "wholesale immorality" and had the names of one or two physicians who had been asked to perform operations on high school girls. The value of Mr. Stein's evidence is to be given a thorough test.

Many Go Astray Yearly.

An attaché of Mr. Hoyne's office pointed out that several hundred girls of school age go astray every year in Chicago and other large cities. He said that the records of the Juvenile Protective association, the courts, and other bodies interested in the welfare of minors will bear this out, but that not all of those girls attend school and those whose mistake can be traced to their associations at school are few and far between. This informant believes that any judicial investigation of the "school scandal" will prove a fizzle.

Mr. Hoyne would make no comment upon the subject beyond saying:

"If these persons possess any evidence of wholesale immorality in the high schools my office and the grand jury ought to know about it."

Waukegan Young Man Back Home After Being Condemned to Death in Mexican Town.

Waukegan, Wis., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Steve Rynksal, Waukegan high school graduate, class of '09, has just returned from Nogales, Arizona, bringing with him a tale of escaped death at the hands of Mexicans. He chanced to pass the Mexican line and was taking a picture of a Mexican boy when four soldiers arrested him. Charged with being a spy, he was ordered shot.

He insisted on seeing the commanding officer, who released him after seeing his teacher's certificate and other credentials.

On his way home he says he saw eight Mexicans lined up and shot, one a lieutenant. The men were lined up alongside a trench in which all fell as the squad fired.

He Wasn't at Home; Nobody Was.

BOSTON.—[Special.]—When the name of John T. Murray was called by Clerk Joseph M. Curley in the Chelsea court there was no response. Clerk Curley called again in a louder voice and an attorney arose and said: "Did you not get a doctor's certificate that my client could not be here?" "Yes, I did," replied the clerk; "he brought it in himself."

DR. JORDAN FINDS THE WEST STRONG FOR PREPAREDNESS.

Peace Advocate Asserts Attitude Is Based on Fear of the Efficiency of Germany.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—David Starr Jordan, who shares the leadership of the peace at any price army with William J. Bryan, today confessed that the people of the middle west are overwhelmingly in favor of increased military preparedness.

According to Dr. Jordan, the middle west is afraid of the "efficiency of Germany." He attributes the desire for better national defenses more to this fear of Germany than to the influence of the munitions makers in this country. Dr. Jordan recently delivered a number of addresses on peace in Michigan, Iowa and Wisconsin.

"I do not see any possibility of a rampant Germany," Dr. Jordan said. "They are in great distress in Germany because of the loss of so many of their people. The feeling against war in Germany now is as strong as it is anywhere in the world. There has been a division in the ministry of Germany on the question of war from the first.

"I do not see any particular reason for increased military preparedness. I do not stand in opposition to President Wilson's policy, however, because President Wilson is the most precious asset that the cause of peace has."

"PORK HUNTERS" FACE DISSENSION ON NEW BARREL

Mississippi Valley Men Want Project Apart from Other River Development.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Dissension has broken out in the ranks of the great army of river and harbor pork hunters in congress. Those living along the Mississippi river have called a meeting for Nov. 29 in Washington, at which time they will discuss ways and means of making the development of the Mississippi a project entirely apart from the development of all other streams in the country.

All congressmen and senators residing in the Mississippi valley have been asked to attend this meeting. The leaders in the movement are Senator Ransdell of Louisiana, president of the National Rivers and Harbors congress, the object of which is to obtain an annual appropriation of $50,000,000 for the river and harbor pork barrel, and Congressman Humphreys of Mississippi, a member of the house river and harbor committee.

See Mississippi Projects Abused.

These men feel that for years the Mississippi has carried with it appropriations for numerous indefensible creeks and harbors throughout the country. Consequently they are going to center their efforts hereafter on obtaining appropriations for the Mississippi without regard to appropriations for other streams. Preliminary steps along this line were taken at a meeting held in Memphis on Oct. 25 to devise ways and means of getting unanimous action on the proposal to have congress consider the lower Mississippi, embracing all territory from the mouth of the Missouri to the Gulf of Mexico, as an individual project.

At this gathering were Senators Clarke and Robinson of Arkansas, Vardaman of Mississippi, Shields of Tennessee, and Ransdell of Louisiana, also Representatives Humphreys of Mississippi, Russell of Missouri, Dupree of Louisiana, Garrett of Tennessee, and Goodwin of Arkansas.

Seek Support for New Bill.

The conference adopted a resolution that the improvement of the Mississippi river and the protection of the Mississippi valley from floods should be made a separate, special, and independent project by appropriate legislation. With this action, suggested by Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the conference adjourned to meet here Nov. 29, when the effort will be made to gain the coöperation of all Mississippi valley members of congress in the preparation of a bill designed to accomplish this purpose.

Senators and representatives from Missouri, Illinois, Arkansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana, without regard to politics, are being urged to participate in the forthcoming meeting.

PETE'S LEAVES FELL HIM.

Autumnal Foliage at Grand Opera So Realistic They Follow Natural Laws.

Pete Donegan, scenic artist of the Chicago Grand Opera company, painted some foliage for the production of Monna Vanna. The foliage adorned the top of a tall column in Guido Colonna's garden. In November leaves fall from the trees. The painted leaves were true to nature, for they fell yesterday afternoon, just before the curtain rose on the matinée performance of Monna Vanna. Instead of drifting gently to the ground they struck heavily their creator on the head, cutting a deep gash. Donegan was carried from the stage unconscious. His injury is not serious.

U. S. OFFICERS HERE TRAIL CHINESE SMUGGLING CLEWS.

Chicago Agents Leave for West to Help Round Up Members of Gang Which Reaped Big Bounties.

Chicago immigration authorities yesterday took a hand in a huge Chinese smuggling plot uncovered a few days ago in San Francisco. According to reports received in District Attorney Charles F. Clyne's office, 600 Chinese have been smuggled in through San Francisco and adjacent ports.

The Chinese, it was said, paid $800 a head to the smugglers, involving a payment of $480,000 to the smugglers and their agents. So far only eighty-seven of the smuggled Chinamen have been arrested. Dr. P. L. Prentis, chief immigration inspector in Chicago, and other immigration officials are keeping a close watch on Chicago's Chinatown.

Howard Ebey, inspector in charge of Chinese cases, left for San Francisco several days ago. Edward Kan, Chinese interpreter at the Chicago immigration station, has been ordered to leave for San Francisco tomorrow.

Drive Any Other Car—Then
Drive the Eight Cylinder Cadillac

An ordinary demonstration as observed from the rear seat will give you an idea of the smoothness and comfort of a car when skillfully driven. But the real test is in the way the car behaves in the hands of a driver unfamiliar with it—in the ease with which he handles it.

But why say "he"? There are thousands of women driving Cadillac Eights. Many of them here in Chicago shrewdly asked to drive the car before they bought it. And after they had once tasted the marvelous eagerness, the instant responsiveness, of the Cadillac—no other car could interest them.

It is the same with everybody who has once "got the feel" of the Eight-Cylinder Cadillac. Though other cars may have V-type motors or 6, 8, 12 or 16 cylinders, they always lack something of the Cadillac performance—the something you will not be without, once you have experienced it.

After driving these other cars you realize that they are still following the Cadillac—that they haven't caught up yet—that Cadillac leadership is more pronounced than ever before—that Cadillac experience has a value to you and cannot be discounted.

This amazing Cadillac, which runs as smoothly at sixty miles an hour as it does at three, which refuses to recognize a hill, which obeys you like a faithful dog, which travels as true to the road and as smoothly as the Twentieth Century—this car you can appreciate only by driving it yourself.

You will find yourself relaxed while driving the Cadillac Eight; you are comfortable, at ease—because you are sure of the car. You will note with enthusiasm the soft action of the clutch pedal, the smooth engagement of the clutch, the certainty of the brakes, the ease of gear changing, the quick yet velvety acceleration of the motor, the steadiness of the steering wheel and its easy action.

These things are a part of the "feel" of the Cadillac Eight—a "feel" you will seek in vain in any other car—the "feel" which has prompted hundreds of owners to say "the Cadillac Company will never be able to build enough of these cars."

Give yourself the pleasure of once driving a car that does everything you have hoped a car would some day do, a car whose limitations you will never find, whose eagerness you cannot exhaust. Arrange for this experience drive by telephone. Calumet 4841.

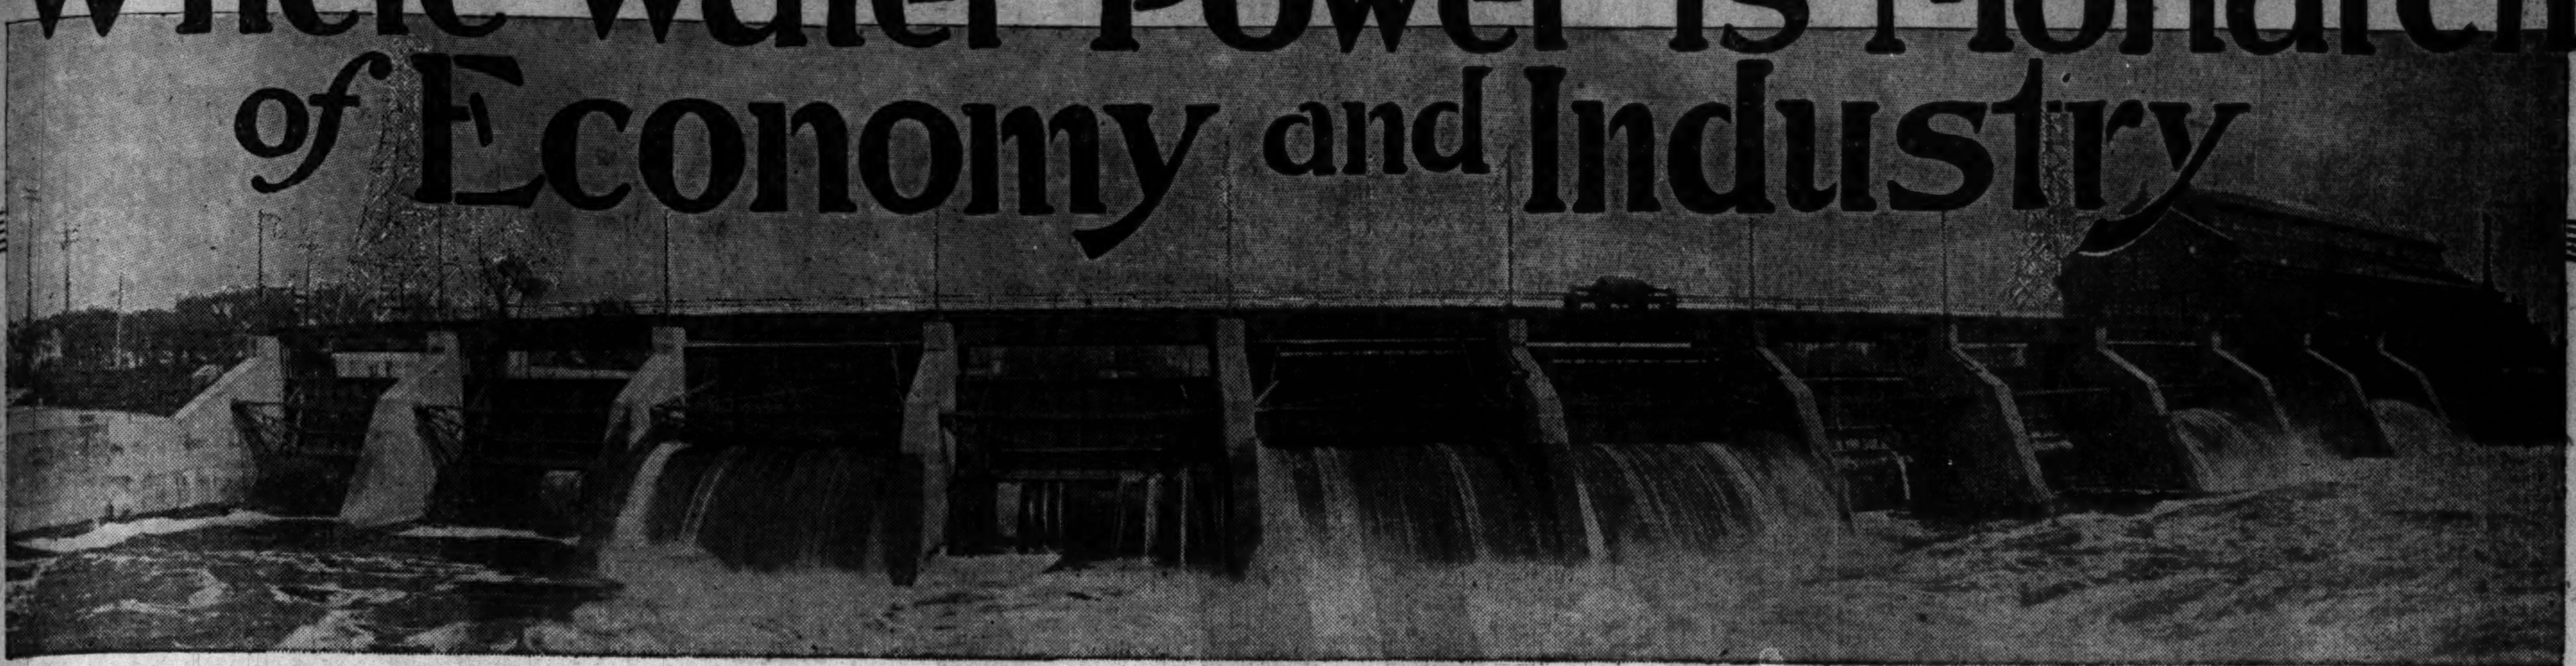
Where Water Power Is Monarch of Economy and Industry



The Harnessed St. Joseph River

Which Makes the Cities of the St. Joseph Valley the Best Places in the Middle West for Both Large and Small Manufacturers

The electric power in the Valley Cities—South Bend, Elkhart, Mishawaka, Niles, Buchanan and Berrien Springs—is derived from four hydraulic plants, harnessing the St. Joseph River, supplemented by a huge auxiliary steam plant.

The four dams are located at Elkhart, Twin Branch, Buchanan and Berrien Springs. The auxiliary steam plant is in South Bend. From these plants current is distributed throughout the valley—by duplicate transmission line. This duplicate transmission system absolutely assures low priced and abundant power at all times—it guarantees reliability.

That power here is cheaper—that costs of operation are much lower—is strongly attested by Manufacturers who have moved their plants to the St. Joseph Valley from Chicago.

These Manufacturers declare that their plants are being operated here at from 20 to 50 per cent less cost than when they were located in Chicago.

You can do as well as these other manufacturers—you can cut your costs—you can make more money—you can live better and give your employes a better living—in the St. Joseph Valley.

GET IN TOUCH WITH US!

Use the attached coupon to get information about your particular business! You will be under no obligation and we will give you facts and figures about your own business that will surprise you.

We will tell you how other Manufacturers, who were facing the same high cost problems you are facing, solved them by locating in the St. Joseph Valley.

The St. Joseph Valley Spells Opportunity For You.

Mr. Manufacturer, why do you continue to live and operate in the crowded city when you can make more money under better conditions in the St. Joseph Valley—less than one hundred miles from the center of Chicago?

In the Valley Cities there is cheap electric power in abundance. Labor conditions are incomparably better than in Chicago. The cost of living is 25% lower than it is in Chicago. The abounding natural resources of the Middle West are just as available here as they are in Chicago. The transportation facilities are practically the same as those of Chicago. The educational advantages are superb—on a par with those of any city in the United States. The Valley Cities are home cities—where people live properly and where there is plenty of breathing space.

What Others Are Doing

Never in the industrial history of this country have we been favored with more promising conditions than those of the immediate present. Noting this fact, the South Bend Tribune of November 6, 1915, says: "Numerous thriving concerns have come here within the last year. Company after company, all supported by goodly amounts of capital, with reliable business men at their heads, are engaging here in manufacturing."

These Manufacturers came, saw and located. Every one of them will tell you that their cost of operation is much lower and living conditions immeasurably better in the Valley Cities.

What others are doing so profitably—you can do.

TAX INCREASES DEMANDED FOR ELECTION BILLS

Chicago and Cook County Want Funds Provided by Extra Session.

REPUBLICANS ARE BLAMED.

Chicago and Cook county made a flat demand yesterday upon the extra session of the Illinois legislature, which begins tomorrow, for an emergency increase in the tax rate for 1916, which will produce at least two and one-half million dollars.

Gov. Dunne is to follow this in a special message which he will transmit tomorrow noon when the general assembly meets at Springfield, tending to show that the Supreme court decision in the Fergus suit and the Sergel case have rendered imperative a formidable boost in the state tax rate for the coming year.

It is learned that Gov. Dunne's message is probably full of statements which may cross the "sensational" line, and will present an indictment of the regular session of the legislature, due to be the issue-in-chief of the 1916 state campaign.

Will Blame Republicans.

The entire blame for all of the conditions, Chicago, Cook county, and state, is to be handed back to the Republican majority in both branches of the general assembly.

Atop of the governor's message explaining the necessity for an executive summons for a special session at this moment will be piled the claims of city and county charging the legislators with having legislated upon the city administration and the Cook county board offices, salaries, and other items of expense without any complemental acts which would permit them to raise the additional revenue to pay the freight.

State senators and representatives foregathered yesterday in the Chicago office of Attorney General Lucey in the Otis building. Present were representatives of the city administration and of the Cook county government, the latter headed by President Reinberg and members of the county board.

Politics at High Tension.

The disclosures and cross-accusations did not tend to temper the tension, politically or factionally, which reached the breaking point when the announcement of the governor's call was made public yesterday.

Chicago charges back to the legislature the passage of the woman's suffrage act. Figures submitted on behalf of the city controller yesterday indicate a particular increase of $746,000 in election expenses, necessitated by the doubling of voting population, more election precincts, the need of additional judges and clerks, and an added burden forced by the legislative act of 1915, raising the pay of judges and clerks of election from $5 to $7 per day.

County Has Complaint.

Cook county's kick comes in with the fact that the county must pay for the extra polling places, the election paraphernalia, and other incidentals in election expense, and must settle for extra pay of court judges, settlement of claims by the public pension acts, and the adult blindness act. The lowest estimate of the increase which President Reinberg would make was $1,400,000 to pay the added expense.

Chicago wants a 1 mill increase in its tax rate to pay the bills. Cook county figures that the county rate must be boosted from 45 to 50 cents.

The state situation cannot be determined definitely until the appropriation bills get through the special session. The Supreme court held to be legitimate the original appropriation bills and refused authority to Gov. Dunne to scale them. This difference amounts to somewhere between $500,000 and $800,000.

Can't Save "Shavings."

Attorney General Lucey informed the legislature yesterday that there is no chance now to save the "shavings" and that the original appropriations must stand.

It is recalled that there was a sharp conflict of political opinion when the Deneen rate of 70 cents was cut to 48 cents by the Democratic administration. The latter rate doesn't raise the cash and a new rate will be ordered on Dec. 1. That is the crisis that confronts the two Republican branches of the legislature and a Democratic governor.

Behind the scenery lies the big 1916 politics, precipitated largely, it is claimed by the legislators, by the inclusion of a primary law amendment in the extra session call.

The understanding reached yesterday by the legislative managers, is to have the senate present in full force tomorrow at 5 o'clock. The appropriation bills will be taken up and advanced rapidly.

General Business Reopened.

The opinion reached yesterday was that, practically, the general business of the regular session of the legislature is reopened by the terms of the extra session call.

More than 125 bills are now drawn and ready to be introduced tomorrow.

One significant feature will be the announced determination of Attorney General Lucey, made yesterday, to supplant attorneys for the various boards and departments, rendered void by the Supreme court decision, with assistant attorneys general named by himself.

Gov. Dunne was asked yesterday by the associated roads organizations of Cook county and Peter Reinberg, president of the Cook county board of commissioners, to issue a supplemental call to amend the program of the extra session to validate $2,000,000 of road bonds voted by the county, which, until the arrival of Attorney General Lucey in Chicago, was thought to have been taken care of in the first call. The attorney general said that the call does not seek to validate the bonds.

A REAL DETECTIVE STORY

ABOUT JOE CAHILL AND JOHN A. HERNIGLE OF THE CHICAGO FORCE

It is so often a newspaper prints stories reflecting on the police and so seldom it has occasion to print stories in their favor that "The Tribune" takes pleasure in publishing this real life detective story, in which the statements of two city detectives, who have proved their efficiency and faithfulness, are set above the word of a convicted thief.

WILLIAM McCLAY

Just before William McClay, forger, departed for Joliet last Friday to undergo that metamorphosis which transforms a man into a number, he fired a parting shot at the two detectives responsible for landing him behind prison walls.

He made a statement in writing to State's Attorney Hoyne that these two detectives had taken him from the county jail on July 7 and held him, contrary to law, but more as a guest than a prisoner, at detective headquarters until July 12.

During these five days, he said, the detectives ingratiated themselves into his confidence by wining and dining him at expensive cafés. As a result of this round of gayety, he declared, he paid them $75 on their promise to obtain his freedom.

Puts Case Up to Mayor.

State's Attorney Hoyne gave out the convict's story Saturday, holding back the names of the officers. He announced yesterday that he will lay the case with the names before Mayor Thompson and leave it to that official to take whatever action he sees fit.

The two detectives are Joseph Cahill and John A. Hernigle of the detective bureau. They have stood at the top of the department efficiency lists for the last two months and have established reputations for energy and expertness in police work.

They denied yesterday that they ever had received a cent from McClay and said State's Attorney Hoyne easily could have proved the convict's story false by an examination of the county jail records.

Didn't Have $75, Says Wife.

Mrs. McClay, whose loyalty to her criminal husband had stood the test of fire, went to the defense of Cahill and Hernigle.

"My husband could not have given the detectives $75," she said to Capt. P. D. O'Brien when she called at the office of the chief of detectives. "Up to the time of his arrest in June I had been supporting him. Every time I met him clandestinely at night I gave him a dollar or some small change with which to buy food. On the night he was captured I had met him to give him 50 cents."

What Happened to McClay.

Here are the facts summarizing McClay's case as checked up carefully from the records of the county jail, the detective bureau, and the Harrison street police station:

Arrested May 29 by Sergts. Magner and Payne for passing bogus checks. Caught by trailing of wife.

Forfeited bonds when case was called in court next day.

Recaptured June 19 by Detectives Cahill and Hernigle.

Booked at Harrison street station June 21.

Taken to county jail June 22.

Remained prisoner in jail till July 7, when he was removed to Harrison street station and held to grand jury in $1,500 bonds.

Sent back to county jail July 7 after carefully framed plan to escape.

Sent to Joliet penitentiary last Friday.

Describes Battle of Wits.

Detective Cahill told the police side of the story last night—a thrilling story of a battle of wits between a smart thief and clever detectives. McClay stands out in the recital as a crook of marvelous cunning. In the open, threading the devious trails of the underworld, he evidently is game worthy of the best craftsmanship of those who make a business of hunting men.

"Hernigle and I had nothing to do with McClay's arrest in May," said Cahill. "It was early in June, a little after McClay had jumped his bonds, that burglars broke into Parke, Davis & Co.'s wholesale drug establishment, in Franklin street, between Lake and Randolph, and stole $10,000 worth of morphine, cocaine, and other drugs.

"Capt. O'Brien had an idea it was an 'inside job.' He learned that McClay's wife worked for the drug firm, and he thought if he could pick up McClay he would come pretty close to solving the crime. He assigned Hernigle and me to the job.

Suspect's Bride Is Shadowed.

"McClay had been married only a little while, and his bride was a pretty woman. She lived in a flat at 1033 Dakin street, and Hernigle and I shadowed her a few nights from the drug house to her home. Every night she would stand at her front window and look up and down the street apparently to make sure the coast was clear. Then she would slip out the door and start on a long walk. All the while she kept casting stealthy glances behind and stopped on every corner to look in all directions.

JOSEPH CAHILL

"Hernigle and I knew she was out to keep a tryst with her husband, but, to our surprise, she met no one. We began to suspect the wise little woman knew we were shadowing her.

"So I went to Capt. O'Brien and says, Captain, it's no use for any man to try to catch Mrs. McClay off watch. Give us a couple of smart policewomen. Maybe she won't suspect a 'skirt.'

Watch from Opposite Flat.

"With Mrs. Marie Crot and Mrs. Miriam Weightman assigned to help us we obtained from a real estate man the key to a vacant flat directly across the street from Mrs. McClay's. In this flat, on the evening of June 19, my partner and I and the two policewomen took up our vigil.

"Soon Mrs. McClay appeared at her window and took observations. Presently she came down to the street and started north in Sheridan road. We four strung out behind her. First went Mrs. Crot. A block behind her walked Hernigle. Half a block farther in the rear was Mrs Weightman and I brought up the end of the procession half a block still farther back.

"We stalked our game out Sheridan road to Wilson avenue and west to Clifton avenue. There Mrs. McClay turned south. Though she kept looking behind, she did not seem to suspect her women trailers.

"Half way along a dark block she stopped. Mrs. Crot signaled to Hernigle that McClay was close by. Hernigle passed the "office" to me. I wigwagged to him to go around the block. A few minutes later he appeared at the corner beyond Mrs. McClay. He had our man's escape shut off in both directions.

Surrounded by Captors.

"We waited. A dark shadow slipped from a doorway and edged furtively towards the woman. It was McClay. He caught his bride in his arms for a quick embrace. Then the jungle senses of the hunted thief scented danger. He wheeled. Straight ahead of him loomed Hernigle.

JOHN A. HERNIGLE

"He turned and made a dash in the opposite direction. I just had time to step into the entrance of an apartment building. As McClay darted past me, I threw myself at his neck. We clinched and went down. In a moment Hernigle rushed up. McClay fought like a wildcat, but we soon had him subdued and handcuffed.

"Next day we learned that McClay was wanted for passing bogus checks on Kraut & Dohnal, 325 South Clark street, and P. D. Earlwine, 109 West Lake street. He was booked June 21.

"McClay was a prisoner in the county jail until July 7. Then we took him to the Harrison street court for his hearing. He was held to the grand jury and as we were taking him back to the lockup he said: 'I've been double crossed by my gang and by a woman forger on Sheridan road. I want to see Capt. O'Brien and make a complete confession. I will tell him all about a gang that has forged and passed a hundred checks all over the north side in the last month.'

"Do What He Wants"—O'Brien.

"That sounded good to Hernigle and me," Cahill continued, "and we hustled him off to Capt. O'Brien's office. As he passed inside, McClay whispered to me, 'I want to talk to O'Brien alone.'

"We waited outside while McClay was closeted with the captain. When the door opened and McClay came out Capt. O'Brien said to me, offhandedly: 'Do what he wants you to do.'

"As we went downstairs McClay said, 'You heard what the captain said, didn't you?'

"'Yes,' I said.

"'Well, you'll have to do exactly what I want you to or we can't put over a pinch on the bunch I'm after.'

"'All right,' I says.

"Out on the street, he said, 'You needn't hold me. I'm going to play square with you and won't try to get away.' 'I'll hold you all right,' I told him. 'Don't worry about that.'

Gets Shave, Haircut, Drink.

"He asked to have a shave first and we took him to a barber shop. He got shaved and had his hair cut. Then he started in to order a manicure and a massage and a few other fancy trimmings. I called him off.

"'Don't impose on good nature,' I told him.

"Then he said he wanted a drink and we took him into a saloon and bought him one. He wanted something to eat next. 'Take me to the Bismarck,' he said.

"'To Weeghman's for you,' I said.

"Into Weeghman's we marched and bought him a cheese sandwich and a cup of coffee. Then we took him back to the bureau.

"'Now,' I said, 'what's your story?'

Tells of Forger's Rendezvous.

"'Listen,' he answered, 'there's a flat at 4541 Sheridan road where three or four of the best forgers and check men in the country meet every night. It is kept by a Mrs. Edna Klem, and she has bales of blank checks, perforators, and stamps to print "Not good for over $75," and other things that make a counterfeit check look genuine.

"'Capt. O'Brien wants you two to go out there with me. I will go inside and you'll stand across the street. When the gang is busy forging checks I'll flash you the office from the window. Then you come up and pull off the pinch. You'll nab three men and a woman, the cleverest in the business.'

"'We're to stay across the street?' I said.

"'Yes.'

"'What kind of a stall you giving me?' I came back. 'Do you think you are dealing with some boob sheriffs or hayseed town marshals?'

Back to Capt. O'Brien.

"It made me mad to have this fellow try to play us for suckers and we went to Capt. O'Brien and told him all about it.

"'What did you mean,' I asked the captain, 'by telling us to do what he wanted us to?'

"'Why, he told me he wanted a shave,' said the captain. 'I meant for you to take him to a barber shop. That's all.'

"Capt. O'Brien had us call up all the north side stations and see how many of McClay's 'hundred' complaints had been registered by victims of bogus checks. There had been only one complaint in three months throughout the north side.

"And We Haven't Seen Him Since."

"'Get a mittimus and shoot him over to jail,' Capt. O'Brien told us. 'Have nothing more to do with him. He was trying to doublecross you and escape.'

"We called the wagon and sent McClay to jail at once. That was on July 7, and we haven't seen him since.

"We bought him a drink and a sandwich and that is the way we wined and dined him. Say, he couldn't have given me or Hernigle $75 or 75 cents if he had wanted to. When we searched him at the station on the night of his arrest, he didn't have a nickel.

"He has had dealings of old with the police and it is certain he would have asked for a receipt if the desk sergeant had taken any money from him. There are carbon copies kept of every receipt given a prisoner but there is no record in the police department of any receipt given to McClay."

MERIT INQUIRY ON CHARGE OF MEDICAL TEST "DEAL."

Two Physicians Said to Have Declined to Take Tuberculosis Examination Because of Favoritism.

The city civil service commission yesterday ordered an investigation of the charge that politics and favoritism controlled the examination for medical director of dispensaries in the municipal tuberculosis sanitarium. Dr. Thomas Hogan was the successful applicant for the position, which pays $3,000 a year.

Dr. John Ritter and Dr. Clarence L. Wheaton are said to have declined to take the examination because of the rumor that the "winner was picked in advance."

President Coffin of the merit board set a hearing for tomorrow afternoon. The participants in the examination and Drs. Ritter and Wheaton, as well as other witnesses, will be subpœnaed to appear. Arthur M. Swanson, secretary of the commission, gave Mr. Coffin a report in which he said the examination "will bear the closest investigation." The examiners were Dr. C. J. Whalen, Dr. Hugh MacKenzie, and Dr. Frederick Tice.

Denies Retrial of Old Suit.

Judge Windes in Circuit court yesterday overruled a motion for a new trial made by Attorney Henry S. Robbins, representing Alonzo J. Cutler, in a suit brought by Mr. Cutler to recover money said to have been advanced Charles W. Pardridge and for services rendered in board of trade transactions of twenty-two years ago. The amount involved in 1893, when the suit was begun, was about $70,000 and the amount asked for by Mr. Cutler in the recent trial, including interest, totaled more than $100,000.

ARE POLITICIANS BUYING CHICAGO UTILITIES BONDS?

Brokers Believe Some One in "the Know" Is Behind Bullish Movement in Stock Market.

"Are the politicians buying Chicago Utilities company bonds?"

Anway, the Chicago Utilities company bonds continued their bullish antics yesterday. Bids ranging between 60 and 70 went begging, while the day before a sale at 55 was a new high mark, and two weeks before any number could have been bought for 9 cents on the dollar The wise men on La Salle street were more suspicious than ever following yesterday's results.

"If the politicians are the ones who are buying because they know what the council is going to do with the ordinance allowing the Bell interests to take over the Automatic company's property, they will make a potful of money," said one broker. "I understand that the series A 5 per cent bonds, for instance, will be worth from 85 to 90 if the sale is allowed."

The graystone home, which was completed about a year ago, was beautiful with the many flowers sent the debutante, who was assisted in receiving by a group of debutante friends, several of whom have yet to make their formal bow to society. They were Miss Marion Strobel, Miss Katherine Carpenter, Miss Edith Ogden Harrison, Miss Aline Manierre, Miss Grace Tuttle, Miss Isabel Baker, Miss Lolita Armour, Miss Sara Rozet-Smith, Miss Helen Aldrich, and Miss Helen Farwell.

Following the receiption a dinner dance was given for some sixty young people, who were later entertained by several professional entertainers.

WAR STOCKS TRAP TREASURY CLERK; SHORTAGE $1,500

Frank McGlynn Admits Using the City's Money to Speculate.

HE HAD A SIMPLE SCHEME.

Wooing the "war brides" in La Salle street brokerage offices cost Frank P. McGlynn, a paying teller in the city treasurer's office, $1,500—and the $1,500 came out of the city funds.

The young teller confessed to City Treasurer Charles H. Sergel after his accounts had been checked up and found to be short.

Expert manipulation of an adding machine by which the peculations were omitted from the itemized list of payments, but were included in the totals, was the method by which McGlynn was enabled to escape detection.

Taken in Three Lumps.

The money was taken in sums of $500 on three different occasions. In his confession, McGlynn gave the dates as Oct. 25, Oct. 28, and Nov. 10.

McGlynn is 30 years old and has been married three years. He has no children. He resides with his wife at 316 South Springfield avenue.

His salary as paying teller is $1,980 a year. He has been employed by the city for eight years and once before a shortage was discovered in his accounts. That was during the administration of former City Treasurer Michael J. Flynn. McGlynn's father, who is a policeman, made the shortage good at that time.

Used Single Scheme.

The shortage was discovered on Friday when Auditor John Gowan-Stobo made the monthly recheck. McGlynn had been able to escape detection through manipulation of an electric adding machine and the fact that he had charge temporarily of a pay roll account book usually kept by Raymond Lyon, who had been away on sick leave.

It was discovered that by throwing the carriage of the adding machine McGlynn had been able to increase the total for the day by $500 without including an item of this figured in the typed list. He had charge of money to be paid city employés and was able to make his slips for the day tally with the amount of cash he turned in. He raised the figures in Lyon's book which showed the disbursements of the entire office, to include the $500 he had taken.

How It Was Done.

The readings of McGlynn's slips on the days mentioned and the altered figures in the account book follow:

Oct. 25—
Slip	$ 2,427.68
Should have been	1,927.68
Book	54,408.24
Should have been	53,908.24
Oct. 28—
Slip	1,495.00
Should have been	995.00
Book	71,393.21
Should have been	70,893.21
Nov. 10—
Slip	1,250.60
Should have been	750.60
Book	48,913.56
Should have been	48,413.56

The discrepancy was located by comparison of the figures with the paymaster's totals. It showed more money had been disbursed by the city treasurer's office than the paymaster had issued checks for.

He Confesses Shortage.

McGlynn came to work as usual and worked all morning in ignorance of the fact that his books were being examined. He received through the mail a weekly dope sheet on the stock market sent out by Jones & Baker, brokers at 29 South La Salle street. Mr. Sergel summoned him to his office and confronted him with the shortage. Mr. Gowan-Stobo and Chief Clerk A. J. Keefe were present.

McGlynn wept. He said he had lost most of the money through speculation on war stocks through the La Salle street firm. He played his own "hunches," he said, and always lost. The rest he had lost on poker and pool games.

He was taken to Chief Healey's office where he repeated his confession and was then locked up at the detective bureau until Monday when a warrant charging embezzlement will be obtained.

"I don't know anything about the matter and I don't want to discuss it," said Mrs. McGlynn.

Sergel to Prosecute.

"I don't want to have to prosecute McGlynn, but I feel it my duty as protector of the public funds," said Mr. Sergel. "He seems to be a bright young fellow and was one of the fastest men in the office, although he always appeared to be quiet and morose. He told me that last March his father helped him make good a shortage of $300 in his accounts when the books were turned over to the new administration.

"He has a clean record with the civil service commission. He often handled as much as $10,000 in currency in the course of a day's work, although he was compelled to account for it before he went home."

Mr. Sergel explained that so far as the city is concerned it will not suffer in any way, as McGlynn is under bond of $50,000 signed by Fred M. Blount, resident vice president of the Massachusetts Bonding and Insurance company of Boston.

FARMERS PLAN TOWN BOYCOTT

Will Cut Relations with Arthur if High School Is Built.

Arthur, Ill., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Farmers of this vicinity threaten to boycott Arthur should the proposition to erect a new township high school here be carried at an election called for Nov. 22. The farmers met in Jonathan Creek town hall and voiced their objections to taxing farm lands to erect the new building. Edward Beals was chairman and Lawrence Purvis secretary. The resolution, passed by unanimous vote, follows:

"Whereas, The last legislature passed an act making it possible for the voters of a city or town to erect a township high school and to tax land to build the house and to keep up the school; and,

"Whereas, We believe the law to be unjust and unconstitutional; and,

"Whereas, Arthur is trying to take advantage of this law passed by that dirty bunch at Springfield and is endeavoring to put a large tract of land into the district if it succeeds in outvoting us, be it

"Resolved, That we stand together as one man, each paying an equal share of all expenses to carry this case through the courts until this law is knocked out or declared unconstitutional. Be it further

"Resolved, That we withdraw our support and trade from Arthur, sell our grain to small stations near by, until we can build our own elevators and handle it ourselves, buy our goods from catalogue houses and small towns around Arthur, do our banking elsewhere, in fact, stay away from Arthur.

"Resolved, That the farmers of this district refuse to vote for any man living in this town or district to be sent as representative to the legislature, and,

"Whereas, It is a fact that our statute books are full of laws that are unjust to farmers and taxpayers of this state, which favor towns and cities, railroads and other corporations, and these city chaps vote themselves high salaries and their friends fat jobs at the expense of taxpayers in general; therefore be it

"Resolved, That these resolutions be published in a Decatur paper and in the farm papers of the state."

MARRIES WIFE'S COMPANION.

Miss Brown "Accepted" First by Joliet Society and Now by Husband of Late Friend.

Joliet, Ill., Nov. 20.—When Miss Lyra Brown came to Joliet from Chicago twenty years ago to teach china painting she was "accepted" in the best social set in the city.

Judge and Mrs. Benjamin Olin took her to their home. Later Mrs. Olin asked Miss Brown to live with them and act as a companion to her.

Three years Mrs. Olin died. Miss Brown continued to the managment of the Olin household.

Yesterday Judge Olin locked his law office at noon and went to Chicago. Three hours later the announcement of his marriage to Miss Brown was sent to friends. He is 75 years old. Miss Brown gave her age at 62.

Byron, Ill., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Frank O. Lowden today was elected president of the Rock River Good Roads' association at the celebration of the Blackhawk trial here. Murray Burd was elected vice president, Malcolm McKennon, secretary, and Lloyd D. Scott, Rockford treasurer.

YOU'RE TOO OLD, SHE SAYS; SHOT

Phone Girl Rejects Suitor, Who Then Slays Her and Wounds Himself.

James Tracey, who lived at 2048 Milwaukee avenue, dressed in his best yesterday morning and waited outside the Lincoln telephone exchange, where his sweetheart, Miss Barbara Keininger worked, to offer her the choice between marriage and death.

The decision and the fulfillment were almost simultaneous.

"You are too old. I don't want anything more to do with you," said Miss Keininger.

Shoots Girl, Then Self.

Tracey's hand was on his hip pocket. A revolver described a bright half arc, and Miss Keininger sank to the pavement with three shots in her body, mortally wounded. Tracey then fired a bullet into his own temple. Miss Keininger died shortly after being taken to the Augustana hospital. Tracey's death was expected momentarily.

Tracey, who is 35 years old, had been nerving himelf up for the double tragedy for some time. Mrs. Josephine Miller of 1822 Howe street said she had learned Tracey told friends in a billiard hall that if Miss Keininger refused to marry him he would kill her and himself.

She Has New Sweetheart.

"Four months ago Barbara started going with a man named Becker, and that may be the cause of the quarrel which led to this crime," said Mrs. Miller.

The police say the girl's mother asked that detectives be sent to the house two months ago to prevent Tracey trying to see Barbara. Detectives watched the house that night, but Tracey did not come.

Barbara Keininger lived with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Keininger, at 1824 Howe street. She had worked at the Lincoln exchange for two years and had a good record.

A statement issued by the company says that as Miss Keininger left the exchange on Friday night two men were engaged in a fight. She took the arm of one and said:

"Come on, I'll explain everything."

Some letters and postcards, very violent in language and evidently addressed to Miss Keininger, were found in Tracey's pockets. One, written to the girl's father, expressed the wish to "see them all in hell soon."

CABARETS LURE PAY ROLL CHIEF; IS SHORT $6,000

John Brokman Puts Fictitious Names on Company Books to Collect Pay.

ARRESTED IN OAKLAND, CAL.

It was six weeks ago that John Brokman, superintendent of repair shops for the Chicago branch of the General Electric company, dropped from sight where the bright lights shine in the loop.

Cabaret companions who had been accustomed to seeing his high powered machine standing in front of stage doors and night cafés began wondering what had become of the convivial Brokman who always seemed to have plenty of money and time to squander it.

Yesterday they learned where Brokman's money came from. As high as thirty fictitious men at times were "working" for him while he drew their pay. Brokman, it is alleged, had padded his pay roll with the names of persons who never existed. His operations, which covered a period of five years, were brought to light when he was arrested in Oakland, Cal., on a warrant charging him with operating a confidence game.

Shortage May Be $13,000.

The sum named in the warrant is $6,534.55, but Herbert O. Clare, auditor for the Chicago branch of the company, says he believes the shortage will be found to be nearer $13,000 when an investigation of the pay rolls is completed.

Brokman is 45 years old and had been in the employ of the General Electric company for ten years. He started as an armature winder and rose to the position of superintendent of repair shops about six years ago. He had charge of the employment of men in the shops, as well as outside gangs of repairmen. It has been found that at times he carried on the pay rolls the names of from one to thirty men who were not employed by the company.

Drove High Priced Car.

He maintained a pretentious home in Clifton avenue, Oak Park, and always drove a high priced car of the latest model. He and his young wife were familiar figures in the night life of the loop and the car made many trips between stage doors and lobster palaces.

Then Brokman suddenly disappeared. Officials of the company began an investigation. They learned he had disposed of his home and automobile in three days' time. He had left his father and mother-in-law, who were dependent upon him, practically destitute, it is said. An examination of the pay rolls revealed the rest.

A warrant charging the operation of a confidence game was obtained from Municipal Judge Heap on Friday. The court fixed the bonds at $7,500.

Yesterday First Deputy Schuettler received a telegram from W. F. Woods, chief of police of Oakland, stating that Brokman was under arrest there and that he had confessed. His wife was with him.

Detective Sergeant John W. Ryan of the state's attorney's office will leave for the Pacific coast today to bring him back.

INDIAN BAND AT DINNER.

Harvest Home Fete of Forty Club to Follow McCutcheon Indian Summer Theme.

The Harvest Home dinner of the Forty club will be held next Tuesday evening, Nov. 23, at the Auditorium hotel.

The decoration scheme will be patterned after McCutcheon's cartoons on "Indian Summer," the decorations and costumes of the diners being such as to fit into the picture, while a real band of Indians will furnish the music. Instead of the time honored custom of the Forty club to pass the loving cup when an original verse is read about a member or guest, at this dinner the "Pipe of peace" will be passed and puffed.

The committee in charge of the dinner includes William J. Sutherland, Charles E. Davis, I. A. McKenna, W. R. Rothacker, and G. H. E. Hawkins.

Wilbur D. Nesbit, president of the club, will act as toastmaster.

SLUGGERS TO BE INDICTED.

Assistant Prosecutor Says Grand Jury Will Return Bills Against Union Men for Violence.

Investigation of various forms of violence attributed to building trades unions will be resumed in earnest Monday by the grand jury and docket cases will be shelved to expedite the inquiry, Assistant State's Attorney Charles C. Case announced yesterday.

"Fifty-seven witnesses have been summoned for Monday," he said.

"The nature and amount of evidence presented to the grand jury so far warrants my asserting that there certainly will be indictments. The grand jurors cannot help but bring in true bills against labor sluggers and others. None has been voted so far."

Mrs. Celestine Major Missing Since Sunday and Her Son Worries.

Mrs. Celestine Major, who answers to the description, has been missing from 525 South Marshfield avenue since 5 o'clock last Sunday afternoon. She was born in Montreal. MOTHER OF CZAR LOVED IN RUSSIA FOR LIBERALISM

Empress Marie Borne Had Important Part in Political History of Europe.

BY EX-ATTACHE.

[Copyright: 1915: by the Brentwood company.]

November is a fateful month for the empress mother of Russia, who, on Friday next enters on her sixty-ninth year. For not only the anniversary of her birth at Copenhagen, but also those of her wedding at Petrograd and of her becoming a widow at Livadia in the Crimea, after twenty-eight years of singularly happy marriage, figure on her calendar for November.

Born and reared as a princess of the Danes, who are, perhaps, the most democratic people of all Europe—a people whose liberalism is of so advanced a character that they frown on all titles of nobility and orders of knighthood, and refuse to recognize any differences of birth and rank—she has ever since her marriage been the most intimate friend and associate of her favorite sister, Queen Alexandra.

Strong Liking for English.

She has all along had a pronounced predilection for everything English, and since becoming a widow, more than two decades ago, has made a point of spending a considerable portion of each year in England. Moreover, she always entertained a warm affection for her brother-in-law, King Edward, whom she regarded as the most sagacious of counsellors.

This being the case, it is ridiculous to describe her as prejudiced against Liberalism in every shape and form in Russia or as champion the cause of reaction. Far from being adverse to the popular reforms of one kind and another inaugurated by her eldest son, the present emperor, she has accorded him her support, merely stipulating that the reforms should be of a gradual and progressive nature. In this she was in full accord with the advice of King Edward and of her most sagacious counsellors, who felt convinced that changes of a too startling kind might defeat their own object and result in revolution.

Desirous of Helping Fins.

In Finland, too, Empress Marie has always sought to alleviate the lot of the people. She has never forgotten that her honeymoon was spent in Finland.

Two or three years after Nicholas had succeeded to the throne, largely at the instance of his mother, he inaugurated a conciliatory policy towards his Finnish subjects, and directed the new governor general, Prince Obolenski, whom he had appointed for the purpose, to suspend the execution of the most unpopular of the measures that had been ordered, namely, the decree making it compulsory for the Finnish recruits to take the oath of allegiance to Nicholas, as autocrat of all the Russias, instead of as grandduke of Finland, and, worse still, rendering them liable to serve in Russian regiments, under Russian regimental officers, outside of Finland, instead of serving in purely Finnish regiments, commanded by officers of their own race, and only called upon to serve beyond the borders of the grand duchy in the event of war.

Wins Friendship of Finland.

Other concessions made by the emperor were the reëstablishment of the irremoveability of the judges in Finland, and the repeal of the decree rendering them liable to summary dismissal by the governor general, or the Russian government in case they incurred the displeasure of either the one or the other. It is, thanks to this, and to other favors granted by Nicholas, at the instance of his mother, to the Finns, that the latter have not only fought against the Germans in Poland and in the westerin provinces of the empire but have let the Swedes and their Teuton friends understand that any attempt of invasion of the grandduchy under the pretext of liberating it from Muscovite rule would be vigorously resisted by the entire people.

Perhaps the best proof that Empress Marie has never been regarded as an obstacle to liberal reform in Russia is to be found in the remarkable immunity which she, like her son, Nicholas II., has always enjoyed from atempts on their respective lives.

Doesn't Fear Assassination.

The eEmpress Marie drives about the streets of Petrograd without any escort, beyond that of her giant Cossack, while in London, which until the beginningof the war was swarming with anarchists and with desperate revolutionists from Russia and from every other country of continental Europe, she has been able to roam about with ueen Alexandra, visiting hospitals and public institutions, in some of the worst quarters of the British metropolis without the slightest danger. This is because she is known by the Nihilists a sthe friend, and not the foe, of liberalism and popular forms of government.

It has ben claimed that the terrible railroad accident from which she so narrowly escaped destruction at Borki, in 1888, was in reality a nattempt on her life, as well as on that of her husband and children. But the most conclusive proofs have been secured that the Nihilists had nothing to do with the matter, an dthat the catastrophe was caused by the spreading of the rails.

Changed Name Upon Marriage.

Empress Marie exchanged her name of Dagmar for Marie on the occasion of her conversion to the Orthodox Greek church, and of her wedding, at Petrograd. Her marriage may be said to have been contracted under the shadow of death. For Princess Dagmar had been previously betrothed to her husban's elder brother, the Czarovitch Nicholas Alexandrovitch.

He succumbed to an affection of the lungs within a few weeks of the date appointed for the weddink, and when his fiance was summoned in haste from Copenhagen to his death bed at Nice he placed her hand in that of his favorite brother, Alexander, and entreated them, as his last wish and prayer, to marry. The union thus arranged developed in course of time into a full fledged love match, and there has never been any royal or imperial couple in Europe whose relations to one another were so completely free from any cloud, and so ideally happy, throughout their near thirty years of union.

Had Passion for Dancing.

It might be imagined that a woman who has played so important a political rôle and who has exercised so remarkable an influence upon the reigns of two successive autocrats of all the Ruesias would be masterful in her ways and masculine in her manner. Yet no empress of Russia, or of any other country, has ever been more essentially feminine.

Until she lost her husband one of her greatest passions, next to music, was dancing. This became knonwn abroad, and in course of time the great powers began to accredit to the court of Petrograd only the best dancers of their diplomatic service, i nthe hope that their envoys, or even the secretaries of their missions, by becoming a favorite partner of the empress ata state balls, might in tha tway secure good wil lfor their country in the society and in the government circles sof Petrograd.

It would be foolish, however, to assert that Empress Marie ever permitted herself or her husband to be influenced in a political senses in this fashion.

Helped Form Triple Entente.

Her preference for France and the rôle which she played in securing the withdrawal of her hussband from the so-called thrtee emperor alliance and in committing Russia instead to an understanding with France, was due in the main to her hatred for Prussia, a hatred dating from the Prussian invasion of Denmark in 1864 and to a prejudice against everything German.

Nor was she satisfied with bringing about th ealliance between Russia and France; she never rested until eight years ag she succeeded in bringing Great Britain within the sphere of the agreement, rendering it a tripartite affair. It is this alliance that became known as the triple entente.

More Stockyards Chutes.

Beginning tomorrow morning, with the sanction of the United States bureau of animal industry, there will be added to the present trading and yarding sections of the Chicago stock yards many more unloading chutes and large additional areas in the cattle, hog, and sheep divisions. This will afford ample room for the prompt yarding, selling, and weighing of all live stock receipts.

Co-eds in cat costumes catapulted in catchy concatenations across the ring producing a cataclasm of catastrophies. Other co-eds looked dogged well in canine coverings.

Among the co-eds in cat costumes were Miss Elizabeth Doan, Miss Elizabeth Felt, and Miss Imogene Fox.

MEN IN U. S. OFFER TO WED GERMAN GIRLS OR WIDOWS.

BERLIN.—[Special.]—An American who signs himself L. Merritt Smith writes to the Vossisiche Zeitung from Healdsburg, Cal.:

"We are twenty young men, all strong, healthy, and of good character. Recently we read in a San Francisco paper that the German government intends to induce foreigners to settle in Germany after the war, to marry German girls or widows and to aid in the reconstruction of the empire.

"Nineteen of my friends and myself are willing to respond to this call, and we desire to make the acquaintance of nice, respectable girls or widows under 30 years, who know some English and are not without means.

"We are all honest and sincere and mean business. Our desire is to marry good German women, as we are lonesome here and cannot find life partners because we are not wealthy.

"Photographs of ourselves and references will gladly be sent. In conclusion I want to state once more that with ladies who only want to flirt we do not wish to correspond."

Will Play for Blind.

Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler will give a piano recital at the Industrial Home for the Blind, Marshall boulevard and Nineteenth street, on Monday evening, Nov. 29. This is the second of a series of monthly programs arranged for by the Chicago woman's aid committee for assisting the blind.

OPEN AIR KIDS NEED TURKEYS

All Ready for Big Thanksgiving Feast, Except the Fowls.

LIVE LIKE GROWNUPS.

TRIBUNE readers, here's a chance for a bit of Thanksgiving charity. There's to be a Thanksgiving dinner for the children of the open air rooms at the Burr and Foster schools on Wednesday. There are sixty children, all tuberculous in some form, and sixty well developed appetites—but no turkeys.

Yesterday Ethel V. Peckham, municipal tuberculosis nurse, wrote THE TRIBUNE if it would be possible, somehow, to get some turkeys.

"The children," she writes, "are from the poorest families in the city. Many have never experienced a real Thanksgiving dinner."

Like Regular Grownup.

You may never have visited these open air schoolrooms, but a photographer did, after Miss Peckham's letter had been received, and made some discoveries.

Book learning is only a part of what they are taught here. For example, the first thing in the morning, when the children arrive, they brush their teeth under the nurse's supervision. Then they have breakfast. Ever hear of having breakfast at school?

After the morning classes and dinner, at noon, everybody retires to the sleeping rooms and naps for an hour. Then the children are given instruction in knitting the heavy wool scarves and mufflers which they will be wearing during the cold winter months.

Hoods and Leggings.

All the work is done in warm coats, hoods, and leggings, provided by the Elizabeth McCormick memorial fund. On the blackboard there is a complete medical chart, showing how long each pupil sleeps, his weight and temperature—weighing is a regular part of the curriculum—and the other things that doctors must know if they are to cure tuberculosis.

It's an interesting place, and they need those turkeys. What do you say? Any suggestions, addressed to Miss Peckham at the Burr school, Ashland and Wabansia avenues, will be gratefully received.

Scripps-Booth with the Harry Newman Demountable Top as the most convenient and satisfactory three-passenger car for Winter driving

Inclement weather at this season of the year makes the protection of an enclosed body imperative for comfort. Demountable tops for Winter use on cars of open body type are rapidly becoming a part of every private garage.

The Harry Newman demountable coupe top for Scripps-Booth cars presents the convenience of two body types on one chassis. The coupe is luxuriously equipped to match the finish of the roadster and fits so closely to the open body that it is impossible to distinguish the line where the two join.

The mechanical work of mounting the coupe top on the roadster is easily and quickly accomplished, and should it become desirable to have the open car during short stretches of fine weather throughout the Winter it can be accomplished with no inconvenience.

The price of the Harry Newman demountable top is $250.00 in Chicago, and owners of Scripps-Booth cars adjacent to Chicago may have the work of installation quickly done at our service station. The price of the Scripps-Booth without the top is $775.00.

Back of every car we sell is Harry Newman service, intelligently rendered with great good will.

YOUNG RUSSIAN TURNS TABLES ON GERMAN CAPTOR

BY DR. EUGENE T. HURD.

TWENTY-SIXTH CORPS, TENTH ACTIVE ARMY OF RUSSIA, IN THE FIELD, Sept. 2.—It is a great treat for young Russian officers when they are of duty for a day to make a call at the Red Cross field hospital.

I had been particularly impressed fo some time by a handsome young office who belonged to the engineering department, as he wore a St. George cross, an I had been anxious to get his story.

My opportunity came one evening afte dinner, when he was in a talkative mood and he told me the story.

It took place during the winter campaign in German Poland. One mornin before the break of day he had crawle out in front of the Russian trenches an was surprised by two German out-posts As they had seen him first, one of them had got between him and his trench There was nothing to do but throw u his hands and submit to capture. He wa taken to the German trench, where h was turned over to a lieutenant, wh spoke a few words of praise to his captors and sent them back to their posts.

Offered Cup of Coffee.

The officer conducted my friend dow the trench to where the captain of h company was sitting looking over chart and sipping black coffee from large granite cup. He was very we pleased to see the Russian officer. Aft talking to him a few minutes and askin a few leading questions, to which h received an evasive answer in each cas he pulled his heavy mustache and with broad smile invited the Russian to jo him in a cup of coffee, which was glad accepted.

Russian Remains at Front.

My friend knew that the Russians we planning an attack at that place f daybreak.

My friend thought if he asked to go the rear now that they would send on one guard with him. He had some chan of getting away from one. He request to be sent back. It brought a smile the face of the captain, for he thoug the Russian was showing the "wh feather." He detailed a volunteer take him back to the rear. His guard w a young fellow whose home was in th neighborhood. He had volunteered o a short time before.

My friend, watching his chance as th passed into a small clump of tr grabbed the German around the wa and pinioned both his arms so that could not use the gun. Being much stronger, he soon had the best of German. Taking the rifle, he in t made the German captive.

German Officers Ride Past.

They were just turning away from road and had not taken a dozen st when some German officers came ri along.

To his surprise, the volunteer drop on the ground and motioned him to likewise. After the horsemen passed German started off across a field tow the trenches. As they hurried along explained that he knew the lay of land well. Not knowing of anything ter to do, my friend followed. Muc

WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE WAR

BY HENRY J. REILLY.

GENERAL.

The announcement and first meeting at Paris of a joint French and British war council which Italian and Russian representatives are expected to join is of the utmost importance, as it presages united action on the part of the allies instead of the generall disjointed action which has hitherto taken place.

FRENCH FRONT.

There have been various local attacks by both sides. On the whole nothing of importance has taken place on this front.

RUSSIAN FRONT.

The Germans in general have rested on the defensive. The Russians have made attacks at various places, but without marked results. The Russian attacks along the south part of the line seemed to have ceased. The failure of these attacks is important because had they been successful they would have had an influence favorable to the allies on Roumania.

ROUMANIA.

It is reported that Roumania is preparing to enter the war. Conflicting reports are received. It would seem that the best the allies can hope is that Roumania will continue neutral.

ITALIAN FRONT.

There have been a few local attacks without material result. The indications are now that the Italians are about to start another series of general attacks along this front.

THE BALKANS.

The troops of the central powers have started to shove the Montenegrins back. What is left of the northern part of the Serbian forces is gradually being forced back, with constant loss of prisoners and guns, on to the Montenegrin and Albanian borders. It is apparently only a question of a short time until this force will entirely disintegrate, due to its inability to resist the enemy and the difficulty of obtaining supplies.

The southern force of Serbs operating with French and British troops just north of the Greek border is now entirely cut off by a considerable distance from the northern Serbian forces. As during the two preceding weeks, there has been reported, during the last week, a number of allied successes in this region. These have been denied by the Bulgarians, whom the map shows to have steadily advanced.

Monastir is reported in Bulgarian hands. All along the line the allies are apparently being steadily pushed back toward the Greek border. As the Germans, Austro-Hungarians, and Bulgarians advanced in the north their lines have steadily become shorter, thus freeing troops which have undoubtedly been sent south to operate against the allies. Unless large numbers of allied troops are immediately sent to this region the situation probably will become extremely critical.

There is an unconfirmed report that Italian troops are landing at Saloniki. This is to be doubted because of the rivalry existing between Greece and Italy with respect to Albania, the Ægean islands, Asia Minor, and trade. The Greeks are reported to have strongly intimated to the allies that if their troops are driven into Greek territory they will be disarmed and interned.

It is also reported that the central powers have again protested to Greece against the allied use of Saloniki as a base, and that Bulgaria and Greece have concluded an agreement. The allies are reported to have demanded that Greece demobilize.

These reports would seem to indicate that the time is rapidly approaching when Greece will have to enter the war. If she does so, she undoubtedly will choose the stronger side, which at present, in the Balkans at least, is that of the central powers, Bulgaria, and Turkey.

As there have been no further reports whatsoever of the supposed landing of Russian troops on the Black sea coast of Bulgaria, the probabilities are that it was merely a raid, or never took place.

DARDANELLES.

In a strong local attack the allies succeeded in capturing several hundred yards of Turkish trench.

THE MEDITERRANEAN.

German and Austro-Hungarian submarines have been increasingly active in various parts of the Mediterranean.

PERSIA.

The reported occupancy by the Russians of Teheran, the capital of Persia, has not been confirmed.

THE FAR EAST.

A report from Constantinople states that Afghanistan is getting ready to enter the war against Great Britain and that there already has been fighting along the border. A dispatch to the London Times from Calcutta tells of two engagements on the border, in one of which the British withdrew and in the other of which they were successful.

SUMMARY.

The failure of the British and French to take an offensive in France, the failure of the Russian offensive, if intended as such, to drive the troops of the central powers in Russia, and the failure of the Italians successfully to resume their general offensive have given the central powers another week of freedom of initiative. This they have used to continue driving the Serbians in the north and to reinforce the Bulgarians in the south so that they might take the offensive against the allies. This they appear to be doing successfully, with the result that, if continued, Greece will soon face the alternative of seeing them forced on to her soil, followed by the German-Austro-Hungarian-Bulgarian invader, or will have to disarm and intern them.

YOUNG RUSSIAN TURNS TABLES ON GERMAN CAPTOR

BY DR. EUGENE T. HURD.

TWENTY-SIXTH CORPS, TENTH ACTIVE ARMY OF RUSSIA, IN THE FIELD, Sept. 2.—It is a great treat for young Russian officers when they are off duty for a day to make a call at the Red Cross field hospital.

I had been particularly impressed for some time by a handsome young officer who belonged to the engineering department, as he wore a St. George cross, and I had been anxious to get his story.

My opportunity came one evening after dinner, when he was in a talkative mood, and he told me the story.

It took place during the winter campaign in German Poland. One morning before the break of day he had crawled out in front of the Russian trenches and was surprised by two German out-posts. As they had seen him first, one of them had got between him and his trench. There was nothing to do but throw up his hands and submit to capture. He was taken to the German trench, where he was turned over to a lieutenant, who spoke a few words of praise to his captors and sent them back to their posts.

Offered Cup of Coffee.

The officer conducted my friend down the trench to where the captain of his company was sitting looking over a chart and sipping black coffee from a large granite cup. He was very well pleased to see the Russian officer. After talking to him a few minutes and asking a few leading questions, to which he received an evasive answer in each case, he pulled his heavy mustache and with a broad smile invited the Russian to join him in a cup of coffee, which was gladly accepted.

Russian Remains at Front.

My friend knew that the Russians were planning an attack at that place for daybreak.

My friend thought if he asked to go to the rear now that they would send only one guard with him. He had some chance of getting away from one. He requested to be sent back. It brought a smile to the face of the captain, for he thought the Russian was showing the "white feather." He detailed a volunteer to take him back to the rear. His guard was a young fellow whose home was in that neighborhood. He had volunteered only a short time before.

My friend, watching his chance as they passed into a small clump of trees, grabbed the German around the waist and pinioned both his arms so that he could not use the gun. Being much the stronger, he soon had the best of the German. Taking the rifle, he in turn made the German captive.

German Officers Ride Past.

They were just turning away from the road and had not taken a dozen steps when some German officers came riding along.

To his surprise, the volunteer dropped on the ground and motioned him to do likewise. After the horsemen passed the German started off across a field toward the trenches. As they hurried along he explained that he knew the lay of the land well. Not knowing of anything better to do, my friend followed. Much to his bewilderment he was taken into a trench that had been captured only a few moments before from the Germans.

Afraid of Death Penalty.

As he turned the volunteer over to a guard he asked him why he had shunned the German officers when he knew my friend could offer no resistance. The reply was that if he had called for help and they had found him so careless as to allow himself to be captured by an unarmed prisoner they would have shot him. His only salvation lay in getting to the enemies' trenches.

As my friend went to the rear to report to his commander he passed a line of prisoners. Among the officers he noticed the heavy mustache of the captain who had sent him to the rear only a short time before. He turned his head as he went by so that the captain would not recognize him.

After telling his story to his commanding officer, he asked permission to give the German captain a cup of coffee, as it was cold and he wished to return the favor that had been given him earlier in the morning.

Gives German Cup of Coffee.

As the colonel was pleased with my friend's escape, and also with the morning's attack, he gave his consent. The engineer went into the officers' mess and, selecting a nice, large cup, had it filled with hot coffee and took it out to where the prisoners were standing.

He stepped up to the captain and said: "Please allow me to return your kind hospitality of early this morning." The look of surprise and wonder that came into the German's face still makes my friend laugh when he speaks of it.

OPIUM IN AUTO MUFFLER SEIZED BY U. S. AGENTS.

SAN DIEGO.—[Special.]—What federal officers declare one of the most important opium captures in the history of the illicit traffic was effected at the American custom house at the international boundary line near Tijuana, when Rusk Mossholder, son of Judge W. A. Mossholder of this city, was apprehended by Customs Officer Earl Beach with two tins of opium in his possession.

Young Mossholder had concealed the poppy juice in the muffler of his automobile and was in the act of being passed by the customs officials when Beach noticed a small crack in the muffler. He investigated, gave the muffler a jerk, and two tins of opium rolled out.

Federal officers declare, however, that they are in possession of evidence showing that less than three days ago Mossholder succeeded in crossing the boundary line with sixty-two tins of opium, for which he paid $32 a tin in Tijuana. He sold the contraband in San Diego, it is said, at $100 a tin, making a profit of $4,216.

Young Mossholder came to the attention of the police and federal officers on the night of July 31 last, when his companion, Mrs. Elizabeth Rae of Billings Mont., was robbed of $8,000 worth of diamonds by three highwaymen on the Coronado strand, but a few miles south of Tent City.

PHILIPPINE WEED CURING MICHIGANDER OF LEPROSY.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—[Special.]—Michigan's noted leper, whose name is withheld, is improving. All the ulcers are healed and he is now able to walk two miles a day.

He came to the University hospital last July and could not take a step. Dr. Udo Wile, into whose clinic the man came, is treating him with an oil made from the seed of a Philippine island plant.

"The man is tremendously improved," said Dr. Wile. "He is able to do a good day's work with any man if public sentiment was not against him. The disease has been arrested, but we cannot tell what twelve or twenty years will bring forth."

CITY JOB PAYS NAUGHT, BUT COSTS HIM $9.95.

VANCOUVER, Wash.—[Special.]—Financially, it is a losing proposition to serve on the city council or as mayor of this city, as it costs real money to be elected and there is not 1 cent salary. But there are always men willing to make the sacrifice.

The law requires that an expense account be filed with the city clerk within ten days after the primary.

To date several have filed this statement. Charles W. Davis, councilman-at-large, spent $9.95 for his campaign, but he said the fun was worth more. Councilman Atkinson spent $4. Fred Mathys spent $1 and lost.

YONKERS YOUTH FIGHTS IN NAVY OF KING GEORGE

Serves on Superdreadnaught in the Dardanelles and in the North Sea.

Yonkers, N. Y., Nov. 20.—Mr. Wilfrid Doyle, the 19 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Doyle of 156 Valentine lane, this city, is back at his home here after seven months.

He has fought the Turk in trenches knee deep in water at the Dardanelles, he has been captured by the Germans in Belgium, and he has stood watch many nights on the deck of the superdreadnaught Queen Elizabeth while it patrolled the North sea.

The spring fever wearied young Doyle of the simple pleasures of life in Yonkers and he ran away from home. He made his way to Boston, where he obtained a place as horse hostler on one of the transports engaged in carrying horses to the war zone. In Liverpool he left his ship and enlisted in the British navy.

He told the recruiting officer that he was an Irish boy.

Plucked from Service.

His enlistment was for the duration of the war, but after six months of effort the state department of the United States plucked him from the service of King George at the behest of his parents.

Gallipoli, Doyle says, is now a shambles and a ruin in the area over which the Turks have been slowly driven back by the allies. Not so much as a drop of clean water may be obtained there.

The streams and wells have been polluted by bodies and blood. All the water used by the allies is filtered on the battleships. The trees in the woods that before the war dotted a fertile farming country have been reduced to stumps.

Doyle arrived at the Dardanelles in May. During one period of the heavy pressure he served for forty-eight hours on land in the third line of trenches. The men of the allied forces suffered fearfully, he says, at that time from the rains that flooded the trenches and the intense heat that made life almost unbearable.

Sees Girl Sniper Caught.

While on an expedition Doyle saw a Turkish girl sniper captured. A group of sailors relieved from trench duty were standing near a haystack. One of them playfully thrust his bayonet into the hay. When he drew it out it was covered with blood. The sailors immediately tore the stack apart and discovered a young girl armed with a rifle in a hollowed space.

V. C.'S IN PRESENT WAR NEAR RECORD OF MUTINY.

LONDON.—[Special.]—The number of Victoria Crosses awarded during the war now exceeds the total conferred for the operations in the Baltic and Crimea sixty years ago, and thus the present conflict takes second place, the Indian mutiny still being at the head with 182 crosses. The latest additions bring the last year's total to 118, against 111 bestowed during the Russian war.

DEATH NOTICES.

IN MEMORIAM.

SMITH'S VAGABOND DOUBLE GETS HIM INTO TROUBLE.

LONDON.—[Special.]—A man named Barney Smith, sentenced in North London police court to three months' hard labor as a rogue and vagabond, has appealed successfully at the London Sessions. He convinced the judge that he had a "double" and had been mistaken for him.

The police evidence was that Smith was an associate of reputed thieves, and was seen outside the Hackney Empire attempting to pick pockets.

Smith, however, brought witnesses to show that he had a perfectly good character and that he was a foreman boot clicker. Witnesses swore that the "double"—an undesirable—attended the music hall on the night that Smith was there and sat in the same part of the house.

Paige Winter-Top Means Year-Around Comfort

Two suggestions we make to Paige owners, present and prospective:

Get the full measure of service out of your Paige "Six-46"—and a full measure means service every one of the 365 days in the year, regardless of weather or temperature.

Be Comfortable—let continuous service unite with continuous comfort.

The Paige Winter-Top assures you this. It is made expressly to fit the Paige seven-passenger "Six-46" and it will make your Paige comfort uninterrupted by wind or weather.

Add this Winter-Top and you have two cars in one—a splendid seven-passenger touring car ($1295) transformed in a twinkling into a luxurious and handsome limousine, complete for year-around service—for $1545.

Moreover, Paige service is many times multiplied. When the storms rage, you take the children to school. Your wife can shop without discomfort. You have a hundred more uses for your car.

The Paige Winter-Top is a Permanent Top. You need only remove the side panels and you have an open car for touring or for mild weather—once again demonstrating two cars in one. Other distinctive features are: Gray broadcloth, sliding windows for perfect ventilation, dome light and harmony of line.

No charge is made for attaching the top, when purchased with the Fairfield.

"Our Country! In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong."
—Stephen Decatur.

COMMON DEFENSE AND GENERAL WELFARE.

We cannot undertake better defense without considering the revenue problem involved, but there is a higher reason for its consideration. The existence of huge fortunes in a real democracy is anomalous and demoralizing both to their possessors and the community. It should be our policy to prevent their perpetuation even in a second generation. Our inheritance legislation should not quail when it reaches the field where this social duty is clearest, but should force a drastic distribution of the largest wealth through laws which will take back to the community a good part at least of what the community has contributed directly or indirectly.

It is strange that advocates of income and inheritance taxes lose their courage as the surtax climbs. They are firm enough when it comes to taxing the middle fortune and the small competence, but they lose their breath and give out exactly when they ought to be strong. Is this an expression of our ingrained respect for enormous wealth, the splendor it suggests and the unlimited power?

Whatever its source, it appears in the proposals for amending the income tax law. One of these is to cut the exemption to $3,000 and $2,000 for married men and unmarried respectively, to begin the surtax at 1 per cent for $10,000 to $25,000 and to end the graduation at 9 per cent for incomes of $1,000,000 and over.

Another proposal is for the increase of the normal rate to 1½ per cent, which would yield largely.

Representative Garner of the ways and means committee intends introducing an inheritance law which, it is said, will not run over 20 per cent on the largest fortunes. It will probably be stiff enough for the smaller inheritances.

The subject of both a proper income tax and of a radical inheritance tax should be one of the leading considerations of the next session. If congress is governed by statesmanly considerations of our international situation it will increase the national defense, and that means more expenditure, even though congress also does its duty by destroying the pork barrel and authorizing the reorganization reforms sought by army and navy men.

If Americans are to be ready to die for the country they must first find America well worth dying for. No state which permits the slums and condones vast inequalities of fortune can hope rationally for a devoted and virile patriotism. Preparedness to meet aggression as THE TRIBUNE has urged before does not mean more ships and more guns. It means fundamentally a domestic strength and prosperity which are possible only when justice and enlightenment rule the relations of all citizens.

If preparedness is not compatible with domestic welfare it is because we are blind or will-less. It is, in fact, a part of one great national synthesis as the founders of the republic understood when they wrote the preamble of the constitution.

O'BRIEN IS RIGHT.

If a doctrinaire said that a certain amount of demoralization resulted from the use of criminals' slang by policemen the disposition, at least of the policemen, would be to say "he's bugs." When Capt. O'Brien, chief of the detective bureau, says so there is the authority of experience and understanding behind it.

"Don't come into the station," the captain told the detectives, "and report that your man had a 'gat' on him. That means a revolver, I believe. Don't say, 'He has just come from the jug.' If you find keys on a man don't come in and say, 'He had a lot of screws.' It is demoralizing to pick up this language of the criminals."

Use of the same argot does not put policeman and crook in a moral parity, but it does suggest that they are looking at life out of the same window. Slang is a departure from the conventional which frequently classifies its users. They have the same outlaw phrases because they are having virtually the same experiences or are engaged in virtually the same occupations. Language establishes a kinship and an argot can indicate one.

A policeman who puts his verbal reports into the language of the criminal class with which he is dealing is establishing a communion which O'Brien says is demoralizing, and O'Brien is not a dilettante.

A policeman represents orthodoxy. He is supposed to keep his shoes polished and his clothes neat, because personal tidiness has its disciplinary relation to order and the proper policeman is the symbol of order. Irregularity is a thing that he puts aside when he puts on the uniform. Preciseness of language in official conduct is as much a matter of discipline as polished shoes.

"A harness bull" will not be the respected instrument of law as a patrolman. A Big Dick is not an imposing agent of police inquisition.

The use of the crook's argot will start the police thinking of themselves the way the crooks think of them. The suggestion is to be what the crooks think they are.

A STRANGE ENGLISH COMPLAINT.

One of the things that Americans understand little and like less is the apparently growing English feeling that the United States has a place in the war and for other sordid reasons if not for cowardice is refusing to take it.

When the Germans revile us we can understand it. Industries in the United States furnish the enemies of Germany with ammunition and guns and bankers in the United States furnish them with money. We know why the Germans hate us, but the English emotion comes out of some species of national egotism that we cannot completely apprehend.

There is an assumption not only that English policy is sacrosanct, but that it conserves, necessarily because it is English, all the liberties and fortunes of humanity. This is a side whiskered vestryman's conception of the importance of his virtue and of the infallibility of his judgment.

Naturally it rolls an American, conscious that the attitude of the United States towards Great Britain has been one perilously near benevolent rather than strict neutrality, to find himself the target of a complaint that is whining rather than dignified.

Our place is not in this war. It would have been an atrocity of American statesmanship to have involved us in it. It is a war of European politics. We are told that a victorious Germany will turn on us. Sensible Americans will take a reasonable view of that and sensible Americans are supporting preparedness plans which will deter a victorious Germany or any other victorious nation from undertaking a conquest of the United States.

To say that Germany will get us is to put forth an utilitarian argument and we have a right to dismiss it without being called ignoble. It is when the moral mood is adopted and the complaint touches our recreancy to a duty imposed by truth, honor, and humanity that the American is likely to find himself provoked to irascibility.

The English have a perfectly good reason for being at war with Germany and it is not a moral reason. If nothing but the moralities had been involved in the issue, Great Britain would be devoting herself wholeheartedly to the business opportunities opened by other nations' quarrels. The Englishman who thinks otherwise is either a sanctimonious Pharisee or a victim of self-hypnosis. To enter a war for material reasons and then complain against the morality of a nation so aloof from the causes of the war as the United States and call it ignoble for remaining aloof from the action, is to give a strange exhibition of hatefully self-righteous egotism.

It may amaze Americans to learn that this whimpering sort of complaint against the United States is current and gaining strength in England. It is so preposterous that it seems an impossibility, but certain forms of English respectability will yield themselves to such a distortion of fairness and rationality.

Surely it cannot represent decent English opinion, but if it gets circulation enough it will begin to influence it, and if it gets circulation enough over here it will produce the greatest irascibility this war has caused in the United States.

If Americans are to be called poltroons because they are not up to their necks in a war of European politics such as Europe has suffered from often enough times before, they will know that the rule of unreason is the rule of Great Britain.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE TROUBADOURS.

Two modern bards whose energies have been devoted to celebrating in rhyme and song the foibles and virtues of American life and men, fixed upon the nuptials of President Wilson and Mrs. Galt as a subject appropriate to their skill. They saw in Mrs. Galt's Indian ancestry an opportunity to get away from the ordinary wedding bell stuff, and they composed a ditty celebrating the love of the white chief and the Indian princess. Then they sent it to Mr. Wilson.

Much later than five hundred years ago an event of much less importance would have brought forth any amount of bad verse. National leaders have always gloried in such expressions of hero worship—often crude and not invariably sincere, but effective just the same. One of the attributes of real national leaders has been to know how to accept such tribute. If it was not spontaneously forthcoming in fact, they made no bones about purchasing a couple of poets or composers.

But Mr. Wilson shrinks from such undesirable publicity. His secretary informed the well meaning trouveres that the president is very much distressed about it. He asks that the song be withdrawn.

Mr. Wilson does not know how to accept admiration of so vulgar an origin. He has striven throughout his administration to become a hero; he laments his failure to acquire a nickname; he goes religiously to baseball games. But he is congenitally repelled by the rather sweaty presence of democracy. He passes academic judgment on the song.

The democracy he loves is the democracy of the study—a disembodied democracy not diaphoretic. The result is that he is not so much a national leader as a disembodied intelligence at the head of the government, a steel engraving rather than a popular hero. People cannot long have faith in a disembodied intelligence. They know it does not understand them.

Editorial of the Day.

PROMOTE CONGRESSMAN FREAR.

[From Collier's Weekly.]

The opponents of pork in congress scored heavily in the last two sessions. They cut the rations of the pork lovers by $42,000,000, and when the shindies were over Senator Kenyon of Iowa, a leading opponent of the two river and harbor bills in the upper house, wrote this to Congressman James a Frear of Wisconsin:

"I cannot refrain from giving credit where credit is due. You are the man who started the whole fight; you are the man who is entitled to the credit."

Frear did start that fight, and he was as busy at the finish as he was at the beginning. He won the right to be recognized as leader of the anti-bacon forces in the lower house, and although Speaker Clark and Minority Leader Mann may not agree with him in all he does, they should put him on the rivers and harbors committee. The rapidly growing opposition to the old log rolling method of spending the people's money on waterways is entitled to representation in the committee when this year's river bill is framed, and it is obvious to everybody that Frear is the man for the place.

LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY

SCOTLAND has a new peeress in her own right in the person of 9 year old Nina Grant, Countess of Seafield, Viscountess of Reidhaven, and Baroness of Ogilvy and of Cullen. She has succeeded to all these Scottish honors through the death of her father, the eleventh Earl of Seafield, and thirty-second chieftain of the great Scottish clan of Grant, who was killed in action last week while serving as a captain of the Cameron Highlanders regiment at the front in France.

All the property, which is very extensive, comprising the entire Ogilvy and Grant estates in Scotland, are entailed with the Scottish honors. Consequently the estates go to the young Countess of Seafield, who, what with the $20,000,000 or more which she is destined in due course to inherit from her mother's stepmother, Mrs. Townsend, has become one of the greatest heiresses of the United Kingdom.

The late earl's story is generally understood to have furnished inspiration for the novel and play entitled "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

Owing to family dissensions, the eighth earl, after spending a few years in the regiment of Life guards, died unmarried, leaving his entire property, namely, the whole of the Ogilvy and Grant estates, yielding an income of over $1,000,000 a year, to his widowed mother, Caroline, daughter of the eleventh Lord Blantyre. The earldom of Seafield and all the minor honors passed, without a vestige of property, to the young peer's uncle, James, who succeeded as ninth earl.

This ninth earl married three times, and after enjoying his barren honors for four years, died in 1888, whereupon his eldest son, Francis William, succeeded to his honors as tenth earl.

He went to New Zealand and there married.

On learning of the death there of the tenth earl in practically destitute circumstances, old Caroline, Countess of Seafield, widow of the seventh earl and owner of all the great Ogilvy and Grant estates, was moved by family pride and also by pity to address a letter to the other widowed Lady Seafield in New Zealand offering to take charge of the latter's eldest son, the eleventh earl, then a mere boy. She wanted to bring him home to England and to educate him in a manner befitting his position, with the understanding that if he conducted himself well she would make him heir to the entire Ogilvy and Grant estates.

She was one of the leaders of the Salvation Army movement in New Zealand and came to the conclusion that her son's religious faith might be imperiled if he were brought up by so worldly a woman as Caroline, Countess of Seafield. So he was educated in New Zealand, one of the schools there undertaking to forego any demand for remuneration for the sake of having his name and title on their books.

He was only 22 when he married there a young girl whom he had known from childhood and who had sat opposite him in the day school, the daughter of a New Zealand physician of the name of Dr. Joseph H. Townsend of Christchurch, New Zealand.

Not long after this marriage the doctor, who was an elderly widower himself, made a most sensational match, leading to the altar Miss Anne Quayle Moore, the greatest heiress in New Zealand, her father having left her a fortune of over $20,000,000. Both she and her husband were devoted to the young Earl and Countess of Seafield, and made them a very handsome allowance.

The doctor is now dead and Mrs. Townsend, who is considerably over 60, has all along intimated that she intends to bequeath her entire fortune to the now widowed young Countess of Seafield, and to her little 9 year old girl, the new peeress in her own right.

When old Caroline, Countess of Seafield, died she left an extraordinary will. According to the terms of the will the entire Ogilvy and Grant estates were left in trust for the benefit of the successor in the family honors of the earl just killed, namely, his 9 year old daughter, Nina, the trustees being bound to pay him an allowance of not more than $20,000 a year from the estates, and annuities of $1,500 a year to his brothers and to his two sisters.

She further directed that the revenues of the estates, save for these payments, should be allowed to accumulate until the death of the earl just killed, and the succession of his hair or heiress to the family honors.

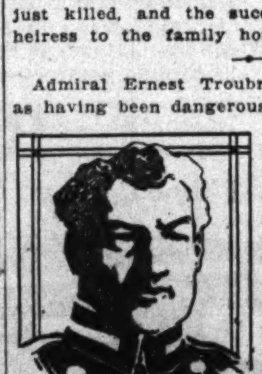
Admiral Ernest Troubridge, who is reported as having been dangerously wounded in the defense of Nish, in Serbia, is the officer who was in command of one of the cruiser squadrons of the Mediterranean fleet at the outbreak of the war. He was relieved and summoned home in order to appear before a court of inquiry at Portsmouth, presided over by Admiral of the Fleet Sir Hedworth Meux, on a charge of having allowed the German cruisers Breslau and Goeben to escape from the Bay of Messina, where they were blockaded, and to reach in safety Constantinople.



He was cleared when it was developed that if he had permitted the German warships to steam out of the Bay of Messina, it was because he had received the most peremptory wireless orders by means of the British admiralty secret code to allow them to pass out of the bay without let or hindrance.

It was too late that Troubridge ascertained that the wireless orders were of a bogus character and had originated with a German who, through some treachery, had obtained possession of the British admiralty secret code. The latter was supposed to be so carefully guarded that Troubridge could have had no idea that the Germans had obtained access thereto, and there was not time to send home in order to have the instructions verified.

THE GALL BLADDER.

THE liver has other work to do besides the secretion of bile. There are those who hold that the secretion of bile is the least important work of the liver. Bile is of some service in digestion, but in bile there is no all-necessary ferment such as pepsin of the gastric juice, pancreatin of the pancreatic juice and maltose and the other ferments of the intestinal juices. It assists in the emulsification of fats, stimulates intestinal peristalsis and retards putrefaction.

It will be noted that this work, while important, is less important than the work of the other digestive juices. In fact, the bile is not strictly a secretion. Combined with the substances secreted are other wornout waste products which the liver has excreted. In fact, the ingredients which give to bile its best known characteristic—its color—represent waste products—broken down blood coloring matter.

Since the secretion of bile is not the principal function of the liver, it follows that the secretion of bile does not start and stop with the need of bile for purposes of digestion. After the work of the stomach has been completed the stomach glands stop secreting entirely. To start them up we chew food or we smell inviting viands or we taste appetizers, or we in imagination taste good food, smell savory dishes or eat.

The stomach only works when digestion is under way. The liver must work continuously doing its many stunts and some provision must be made for storing the bile not needed for immediate use. The gall bladder is that standby provision. The gall bladder and the seminal vesicles are the only two secretion containers in the body. The salivary, gastric, and pancreatic glands are without bladders. On the other hand, the organs of excretion are provided with storage receptacles. The bile secreted by the liver pours down the gall ducts. If there is no need for it in the intestines the bile is poured into the gall bladder. When digestion is under way the bile streams, supplemented by a stream from the gall bladder, pours into the intestine.

The gall bladder is located on the under surface of the liver. As it distends it reaches the front edge of the liver at the edge of the ribs about the tip of the ninth rib on the right side. This is about three inches above the navel, and, of course, well to the right of it. If the enlargement of the gall bladder increases considerably, and it may dilate so that it holds more than a pint, the cyst pushes out toward a point an inch or two to the right of the navel.

The gall bladder is a thin walled sac with a single opening through which the bile flows in and then flows out again. It is so located that it is rather easily infected and it contains a very complex liquid. These characteristics mean that the principal diseases of the gall bladder are gall stones and cystitis. It is so tucked in under the liver that it is not easily hurt. It is not often the seat of cancer.

GALLSTONES.—The beginning of gallstones is in a very mild infection of the gall bladder wall. The cause of this infection is the typhoid bacillus or one of the ordinary bacilli of the intestines. The gall bladder is a natural home for the typhoid bacillus. This bacillus will not live long in water, ice, milk, or even sewage, but it lives, grows, thrives, and multiplies in bile.

As the result of a very mild infection of the wall of the gall bladder a small plug of mucus is formed and around this crystals deposited from the bile collect to form a gallstone. In some cases but one gallstone forms in the gall bladder, but more frequently there are many and there may be hundreds.

So long as the gall stones remain at rest in the gall bladder they give no symptoms or, speaking more accurately, the average case is without pain or any other considerable disturbance. Somewhere between one-twelfth and one-sixth of all the grown people have gall stones. Two-thirds of the cases are in women. Fat women between 40 and 60 years of age are the special gall stone subjects. Take fat women over 40 as you meet them and probably one out of every three if not every other one has gall stones. Probably not more than one man out of every twenty is similarly affected.

These conclusions are based upon tens of thousands of reports of autopsies. If you were to ask a hundred fat women over 40 if they had ever had gall stones ninety-nine of them would answer no. A few would answer that they had had one or more attacks years before, but they had been so free from symptoms for so many years they had almost forgotten about it.

What is the answer? The answer has already been indicated. Gall stones of themselves do no harm, cause no symptoms. Gall stones caught in any part of the cystic duct or the common duct produce very violent symptoms.

It is in consequence of these facts that so many quack gall stone remedies are on the market. A man has an attack of gall stones. His pain is agonizing. He vomits and sweats and his pulse shows that he is profoundly shocked. He has a rigor, his fever goes to 102, and he becomes deeply jaundiced. To get relief he takes morphine or even chloroform. His illness makes a profound impression on his mind. Somebody recommends a gall stone medicine, saying that it will prevent him from having any more attacks. He takes it and never has another attack. Naturally, he concludes the medicine did it. He does not know that many people who have one attack never have another or that most of the people who have gall stones do not know it, or maybe the proprietor of the gall stone medicine is an ordinary confidence man. Maybe his remedy consists of olive oil and an alkali which in the intestines make masses that look like gall stones. If the man happens to take a gall stone medicine of this class he finds the stonelike masses in his bowel movements and is certain that the medicine is a wonderful cure.

No medicine taken internally will dissolve gall stones or otherwise remove them. If the gall stones are causing symptoms severe enough to demand the removal of the stones it is done by operation. There is no other way. The symptoms which may be severe enough to make operation advisable are: repeated attacks of severe gall stone colic, frequent recurrence of pain in the gall bladder less severe than a colic, but severe enough to somewhat disable one, jaundice, chills and fever, indigestion.

INFECTION OF THE GALL BLADDER

The gall bladder is frequently infected. The infection may run an acute course similar to that of appendicitis. It is well to know that in this type of the disease the gall bladder may fill with pus and rupture in a few days, just as the appendix does. The symptoms of this type of gall bladder infection are much the same as the symptoms of appendicitis.

A few years ago Dr. Charles Mayo, one of the best surgeons in this country, was taken sick when away from home. He was operated on by another very able surgeon. He operated on his appendix when his trouble was in his gall bladder and it was necessary to operate on the infected gall bladder a few hours later. If the symptoms of the two infections were confusing and led to error in that case it is liable to happen in any case.

But acute violent suppuration of the gall bladder of the type similar to acute appendicitis is the exception. The gall bladder is a larger bladder than the appendix. It drains much more easily.

The ordinary type of infection of the gall bladder is a much milder disease. Note the symptoms, for it may be what is ailing you. Let us suppose a case like this: A middle aged woman somewhat too heavy for her height has fever periodically. The fever does not go very high. Sometimes it starts with a chill. More frequently it sneaks up. It does not cause as much aching as does a malarial chill. The feeling is rather like one of fatigue and a general no-accountness. The fever is not sweated off. There may be a little pain or tenderness or heaviness in the liver. There may be a little jaundice.

The first thought is that the case is one of malaria. But quinine and calomel have no effect. The next thought may be that the case is one of tuberculosis. But there is no cough, no tendency to emaciation, and physical examination shows no evidence of consumption.

The disease lasts for months and even for years. The patient feels worthless, energyless, constantly tired, never well, always just bordering between sick and well—a chronic state of halfway invalidism. Not having the strength or energy to exercise she gets fatter all the time and the more fat she puts on the more disabling her disease becomes.

Perhaps Vichy, Carlsbad, Saratoga, or some other carbonated alkaline waters help some of these cases, but for most of them the only treatment that is of service is operation. This they know, but they find it difficult to decide between the drawbacks of operation and those of semi-invalidism. Decision would be easier if it were not that the days are much alike. There is always mild fatigue, but never a definite emergency or any other occurrence which serves to crystallize a decision.

Cancer of the gall bladder is the only other disease of the gall bladder of importance. It is one of the rarer forms of cancer.

DIET FOR BABY.

Mrs. L. writes: "1. Would you kindly tell me what quantity of milk and water a 10 months baby, weighing twelve pounds, ought to feed in twenty-four hours?

"2. Also amount of malt sugar.

"3. Does barley water aid a baby suffering from rickets?

"4. If not, could you please suggest something that will?

"5. Where can I obtain free literature concerning baby feeding?"

REPLY.

1 and 2. About 15 ounces of milk and 17 ounces of water and one ounce of malt food. The baby can have some oatmeal or barley water. Let him have a hard cracker buttered, or a piece of buttered hard toast.

3. No.

4. In a general way a baby suffering from rickets should have more fats. He should have some butter or cod liver oil, some egg yolk if it agrees with him. He should be kept in the open air. By all means have a physician see your child and advise you.

5. Send to the children's bureau, department of labor, Washington, D. C. Also write your state and local health departments.

SOILED LIBRARY BOOKS.

Reader writes: "Can you say to what extent the books of the public library are carriers of disease, and what preventive steps, if any, are taken? The question is prompted by the receipt of a book from the library so dirty, in appearance at least, as to cause its return without perusal, although the writer believes he is anything but notional in such matters. It is hard to see how a book could become as dirty as this one was unless through the turning of the pages by fingers inordinately dirty, and, as is a common practice, wet with saliva for the purpose."

REPLY.

Books carry very little contagion. The bacteria which cause disease do not readily withstand drying. Ordinances commonly require that library books in quarantined homes shall be disinfected. The disinfection is sometimes done with formalin and sometimes with a gasoline mixture. Idaho, Wisconsin, and Nebraska have state health rules requiring that books from quarantined premises shall be destroyed. Nine states require that such books be destroyed or disinfected. These regulations do not cover the very dirty books concerning which you write. Such books have been soiled by dirty spit covered fingers. Libraries burn such books, but many people think they are too slow about it.

GETTING RID OF FLEAS.

Constant Reader writes: "Myself and family are afflicted with fleas; they are in the bed blankets and all our underwear. Kindly tell me through THE TRIBUNE how we can get rid of them."

REPLY.

1. Banish all dogs and cats, clean the woodwork very thoroughly, using soap and water. Get rid of all dust and stay rid of it. Use a vacuum cleaner as needed.

Sprinkle flake napthalene on the carpets, rugs, and bedding. Use five pounds for an ordinary size room. Close the room. At the end of twenty-four hours sweep up the napthalene and use it in the next room. In this way treat every room in the house, or at least every room in which there are fleas.

REPLY.

Sherman's "Chemistry of Food and Nutrition." An article by Eustis appeared in the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal, April, 1914.

ORDERED TO CORRECT VIOLATION.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Kindly tell me why it is permissible for the parochial school of the Holy Trinity parish on Noble street and Milwaukee avenue to endanger the young lives of 2,000 children. The present school building is an old firetrap, which has been condemned for the last two years; however, nothing has been done in the way of safeguarding the little ones. Can the city authorities afford to tempt a terrible disaster similar to the one that occurred a few weeks ago in the east?

A READER.

We have investigated attached complaint regarding school at 1110-1118 Noble street and our inspector finds that there is but one violation of the ordinances of this bureau and same has been ordered corrected.

IMPOSSIBLE TO DETAIL POLICEMEN AT CROSSINGS.

Chicago, Nov. 16.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Can you tell me why a policeman is not detailed at the crossing of Ashland boulevard and Twelfth street. The traffic here is very great, and it is extremely difficult for people to pass without endangering their lives. It sometimes is necessary to stand and wait several minutes before you can pass safely.

JACOB L. LAZARUS,
1130 South Hermitage avenue.

The board has constructed two safety islands—one on Ashland boulevard, at the north line of Twelfth street, and one on Twelfth street, on the west line of Ashland avenue, for the safety of pedestrians. As we have eighty street car and boulevard intersections in the system, it is impossible to detail policemen continuously at all those crossings.

EXTRA LIGHTING NOT WARRANTED.

Chicago, Nov. 13.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Would it not be possible to have placed on One Hundred and Fourth street, west of Prospect avenue, an additional gasoline street light of the type now used in our neighborhood?

R. D. WILLIAMS,
1632 West One Hundred and Fourth street.

As we advised Mr. Williams on Oct. 28, 1915, residence and traffic conditions on One Hundred and Fourth street, between Wood street and Prospect avenue, do not warrant the installation of additional lights at this time. An inspection of this location shows that Mr. Williams' house stands alone at a distance of some 600 feet from other houses on One Hundred and Fourth street. There is a flame arc lamp on Prospect avenue at a distance of about 100 feet from Mr. Williams' residence. Under the circumstances it is obvious that the department can take no action in this matter.

CAN HAVE MAN ARRESTED.

Chicago, Nov. 18.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I wrote an important letter to a lady friend of mine. Her husband stopped it and she never received it. I met him afterwards and he insulted me terribly. Kindly inform me if any legal action can be taken against the man.

M. M. D.

The postal law of the United States says: "Any one who shall steal the mail, or shall . . . or take from or out of any mail or postoffice, branch postoffice, or other authorized depository for mail matter, any letter, or packet . . . be punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year nor more than five years." This applies to the man in this case. Furthermore, if he publicly insults you and annoys you on the street, he can be arrested for disorderly conduct by the city authorities and properly punished for that, regardless of what the federal authorities may do on account of his offense against the mail.

Chicago, Nov. 19.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Kindly advise me if there is a penalty for opening one's personal first class mail and hold it almost a week before forwarding, when the party has the address of the party which the letters are addressed to.

O. E. H.

The United States statutes provide that "any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct or retard the passage of the mail . . . shall, for every offense, be punishable by a fine of not more than $100." The term "passage of the mails" applies to the time the letter is in the postoffice, as well as the time it is actually in transit. However, any special agent of the postoffice department has the right to open and detain any improper letter, or open any letter he suspects as improper, for the purpose of inspection.

Chicago, Nov. 19.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I made an oral contract with a builder to build a barn. Before the barn was finished the builder was arrested and will perhaps be sent to prison. Would this break the contract?

A. S.

The safest way is for you to serve a written notice upon the man who contracted to build your barn to the effect that, unless work is resumed upon said barn in three days' time you will engage some one else to complete same. Then at the expiration of that time you are at liberty to employ some one else to complete the building.

'LOWEST AND DIRTIEST WORD.'

Danville, Ill., Nov. 16.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Some time ago I read your editorial, "Polishing Dollars and Marks," in which you again try to defend the indefensible trade in arms and ammunition by American manufacturers.

You concluded this editorial with the sentence: "It is better to polish our dollars in the blood of belligerents [which in reality means the blood of the Germans] than to polish the bayonets of an enemy in the blood of our own people."

This sentence is, so far as I know, the lowest and dirtiest word that has been spoken in defense of the crime of wholesale murder which is committed by the American export of arms and ammunition.

Yours is a wonderful logic, indeed! Our country is murdering the brave Teuton sons by the thousands through this export. We polish, as you admit, our dollars in blood; but in your opinion this is far better than to have any nation come over here and polish their bayonets in blood. It does, of course, not occur to you that we polish our dollars in the blood of the German nation, which has been friendly to us all the time and has lent a helping hand to us in our own troubles, and that by doing so we are helping old England, which formerly has polished its bayonets in the blood of American people.

With the same logic you could say: One day I might be attacked by a murderer, therefore, in order to protect myself against a possible future attack, I must begin to help those who formerly tried to kill me, in killing off my friends. Is that American logic? Or American morality? Is that the civilization of the paper that modestly calls itself "The World's Greatest Newspaper"? Is this your interpretation of Stephen Decatur's words: "Right or wrong, my country"?

Judas Iscariot of old certainly had more honesty left than you and people of your kind, for after he had committed his terrible deed he hung himself, because he said: "I have betrayed innocent blood," and that is exactly what you and your friends, the traders in blood money and their defenders, are doing.

Don't come again to us with your foul excuses, as we know them all by heart. They are not worth the paper on which they are printed. We know, moreover, that all those people in this country in whose hearts a spark of honesty is left are sick and tired of this American murder business.

Let me remind you of another of your wonderful sayings, which I found in an editorial of Aug. 3, 1915: "The effect of the sale of ammunition by American manufacturers for good or bad upon other nations cannot properly concern us."

It is estimated that at least a few hundred thousand German soldiers have been killed, crippled, or wounded by our "polishing dollars in German blood." But why should you be concerned about this?

I advise you to study Math. xxiii., 27: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For ye are like unto whited sepulchers, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones and of all uncleanness."

I have laid aside your two editorials as documents of our great civilization in this celebrated twentieth century.

BRUNO HOWE, Pastor.

HOW DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?

Chicago, Nov. 16.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Having read with great interest your article about "The Wilson Defense Program," I herewith beg to make the following suggestion for obtaining the required 750 regular officers for training reservists and green recruits.

There are several hundred high class trained German officers and soldiers in this city who would be only too glad and willing to give the green recruits and intended soldiers of this country the first class training which is essential to build a regular army for this country, in about the same way and manner as the German army is composed of.

They are fine men of military ability, able bodied and strong, and of superb moral spirit, who could give the new army of green recruits a training to make soldiers for this country in the same fashion as the German soldier—viz.: the soldier up to date.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—You republish that North American "editorial" Reversible President. You must be fond of it.

Let me ask, when did Roosevelt, during his terms of office, ever show interest in "preparedness"? When did he enlarge our fighting force, army or navy? What, in fact, did he ever do but blow and brag and pose?

That "political leech" held office from the time he quit school till the country kicked him out, good and hard, and if he possessed one grain of modesty, had not his hide been thicker than the hide of a rhinoceros, he would have stayed where he was kicked. And I voted for him once. God forgive me!

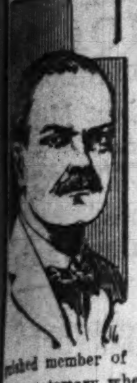
A BYZANTINE EMPRESS

By Edward Goldbeck.



THEOPHANO was just as beautiful as that bewitching hussy Helen, to whom humanity owes the Iliad. A French novelist speaks of her "transcendent beauty, of her lines of a cameo which in their harmony had the power to shake the world." In 956 A. D. she married the young Romanos II., the heir apparent of the Byzantine empire. Her father, Crateros, was a plebeian; he kept a saloon in one of the obscure and ill-reputed corners of the gorgeous city which is now called Constantinople. The name of the future empress was Anastasia, but when she approached the throne she was baptized Theophano, to show that she was "selected by God." That her beauty carried away the young Romanos is not to be wondered at, but nobody knows where he met her first. Perhaps on a "spree," for he was a distinguished member of the midnight crew, or at one of those beauty shows which were customary when a Byzantine prince wanted a wife. Then the most beautiful girls of the empire were gathered without any regard to their origin in the imperial castle for the happy mortal's choice. It was a very nice custom, romantic and unprejudiced and thoroughly to be approved of from the eugenic point of view.

Romanos was a handsome fellow, "straight as a cypress," his eyes were appealing, his complexion clear, his air amiable, but he was not what we would call "intellectual." His favorite occupation was sowing his wild oats, but—gracious me!—he was only 19. His father, Constantinos VII., a ceremonious and pious man, had vainly endeavored to inoculate his own qualities into his son. He had taught him, says the chronicler, "how an emperor must talk, walk, stand, smile, dress, and sit." But in spite of his Chesterfieldian punctiliousness he does not seem to have objected to the "mésalliance" and perhaps he hoped, like so many parents before and after him, that the young man would settle down after the wedding.

He did more than that; he died only a few years later, and some contemporaries charitably hinted at his being poisoned by the empress, but this is probably a calumny. As we shall see, Theophano preferred the sword to poison. Moreover she was a very intelligent woman and could hardly have overlooked the danger of her position as a widow with four little children at the head of a great empire and a court which was even then famous for its intrigues. As long as she was married to Romanos her conduct seems to have been irreproachable. The criminal and tragical days of her life are only dawning now.

THEOPHANO was 22 when her husband died. Without hesitating she made herself regent for the two young "purple born" boys, Basilios and Constantinos; but her situation was very difficult, and particularly so for an ambitious woman. Near to her she found the omnipotent minister, Joseph Bringas, who had governed like a despot under the late emperor. And at the head of the victorious army in Asia there was the famous general, Nicephoros Phocas.

Nicephoros Phocas was then the most popular man of the monarchy. He had beaten the Arabs and reconquered from them the isle of Crete; he had unfolded the imperial standards beyond the Taurus and humiliated the Syrians. He was the hero of the army and the favorite of Constantinople. When he returned from Crete and triumphantly entered the Hippodrome, he stunned the people by the splendor of his retinue: "all the riches of the barbarians seemed to flow into the circus like a river which never silts up."

There was nothing of the "lady's man" in this rough warrior. He was 51 and far from good looking. Heavy and thick set, he had an enormous chest and rather short legs. His head was disproportionate, his complexion tanned and leathery, his hair dark, the nose sharply curved, the beard already grayish, the eyes of a somber and meditative expression. A foreign bishop who saw him said that he looked like a negro and would frighten one if he met him at night. [You must not forget that we are more accustomed to the sight of colored people than the Byzantinians of the tenth century were.] He was an old ironside, austere and taciturn. Since the death of his wife and his son, of whom he was bereaved by an accident, he had become an ardent mystic. He ate no meat, had made a vow of chastity, slept on a hard couch, and thought very seriously of burying himself in a monastery. Ascete and warrior, harsh and wistful, money-grabbing and detached from worldly aspirations, he combined in his complex soul the most irreconcilable contrasts and under his forbidding appearance hid a profoundly passionate heart.

Theophano must have felt that she was not strong enough to fight or subdue by diplomatic means both of these men, and that she would have to side with one or the other. With keen feminine instinct she chose the warrior. She ordered him home in spite of the prime minister's opposition, and Phocas could modify Cæsar's words into: "I came, saw, and was vanquished." He tried to hide his ambitious plans and his hatred against the prime minister by emphasizing his purpose to withdraw into a monastery; however, Bringas could not be duped. He invited the general to the imperial castle with the intention of blinding him, but Phocas saw through his game and sought refuge in the Great Church, where he implored the protection of the patriarch. This high dignitary was a man of undauntable courage and he disliked the prime minister, so he obtained that the senate was convoked immediately, and he expressed himself at the meeting of this august body with so much frankness and energy that Phocas was confirmed in his command of the army. He left at once for Cæsarea and was now master of the situation.

Theophano had kept in the background all this time and had carefully avoided committing herself, but nobody doubted that the threads of all the intrigues were gathered in her hands. When the populace assailed the guards of the prime minister and destroyed his palace, the empress was believed to have instigated the riots from the quiet haven of her boudoir. Phocas was elected emperor by popular acclamation and Theophano married him. She did not love the man and her marriage was entirely a result of political considerations. She violated her feminine feelings and the revenge could not fail to come.

There is no woman in history who has been able to suppress the exigencies of her sex; even the greatest of them, Catherine of Russia and Elizabeth of England, were slavishly subject to their passions. In Constantinople society pretended to be dreadfully shocked; there was no end of gossiping. The patriarch himself who had saved Phocas' life was genuinely indignant, because the marriage of a widower with a widow contravened the ecclesiastical rules. When the new emperor came to the church of St. Sophia to receive the communion the prelate pushed him back and forbade him to approach the altar for a year. It is true that he was later on deserted by his clergy and forced into an agreement with Phocas, but the wedded life of the illustrious couple began under very unfavorable auspices.

At first, however, everything went smoothly. Phocas was head over heels in love with his beautiful wife and overwhelmed her with all the refinements of luxury. He could not bear to be away from her, so he took her with him on his campaigns, and once when he had departed alone he stopped the campaign brusquely to hurry back to the sorceress. Poor woman, she must have had a very bad time of it! But when the first revelings of passion were over Phocas' real nature got the best of him again. He waged war almost constantly and left the empress at home. His fits of mystical piety returned, too; he took up all his old customs of asceticism. The contrast between the two was too great, his forbidding masculinity and her entrancing womanhood did not agree. They were both too self-centered, too strong to yield and melt. To make a long story short, he bored her. And so she took a lover, Phocas' nephew, John Tzimitzes. This man seems to have been the only great, the real love of the empress, and he rewarded her as real love is rewarded so often. The lovers decided to get rid of the encumbering old man. Conspirators were hidden in the apartment of the empress, dressed up as women. The emperor received a warning and sent one of his officers to search Theophano's rooms. The fool did not know that you must not leave work like that to another man. Probably the officer did not want to find anything. But the conspirators had other misgivings. The emperor would certainly lock his door, he would awake when they had to force it, and what might happen then?

Theophano found a way out of the difficulty. She called on her husband, chatted amiably with him and begged him to leave the door open. She would only say good-night to a lady friend who stayed with her and then she would come back. It was about 11 o'clock, a terrible storm was raging on the Bosphorus. Snow was falling heavily, and the little boat in which Tzimitzes landed under the windows of the empress was just as white as the desert beach which was stretching along the wall of the imperial palace. Tzimitzes was drawn up in a basket fastened with ropes and, at the head of the conspirators, he rushed into the emperor's room. The imperial bed was empty and there was a moment of confusion and fright, but then the murderers discovered Phocas sleeping on a panther's skin in a corner. They butchered him in the most terrible way, and at torchlight showed his bloody and disfigured head to the awed people. The nation, stunned and cowed, did what Theophano had done: it surrendered to Tzimitzes.

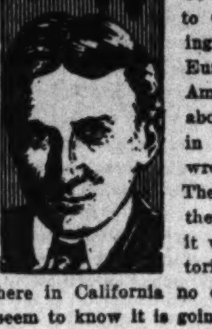
SOMETIMES (not very often) history shows a sense of justice. The patriarch whom we have already admired for his courage towards the great of this world proved once more that he was a strong character. He had been at odds with the assassinated emperor, but when Tzimitzes appeared in church to be crowned the prelate refused to receive him until he would have punished the murderers and discarded Theophano. Tzimitzes did not hesitate. Theophano had hoped to share power, honors, and riches with the man she adored, and now he chased her from court and sent her to a remote monastery. She saw hime once more, insulted him in impotent wrath, and had to be dragged from the room.

Six years after these horrible events Tzimitzes died and Theophano's sons, who had become emperors, called her back to Constantinople. But she never played an active part again, and one does not even know at what date the ambitious, fascinating, and perverse woman died. Her lover's ingratitude had probably killed her zest in activity and intrigue. Phocas was revenged.

One of the daughters from Romanos II., Theophano, married Otto II., emperor of Germany, in 972 A. D. The other one, Anna, became the wife of the Russian prince, Vladimir I., who at this solemn occasion was baptized and converted a great part of his nation to the Christian faith. The Russian claim on Constantinople is originally founded on this marriage, and it is a rather weak foundation, as the German ruler who married Theophano's other daughter certainly had the same rights. Orient and occident, the Asiatic and the European world, are interested in the strange woman whose fate we have contemplated, and those people who see in history nothing but an immense net of accidents might ask the question whether the present war would have devastated Europe if Romanos II. had not fallen in love with the daughter of a saloonkeeper a thousand years ago.

DEPRESSION in EUROPE and in AMERICA

By Robert Herrick.



WHEN I left America for Europe last spring my friends said: "Why do you want to go into that mess? It will be so depressing!" One suggested: "Come with me to California instead—the roads are excellent for motoring." Another one wrote: "I hear you have gone to Europe. I hope it isn't true! I think the best thing an American can do is to forget the war, at least not talk about it, or think about it, if possible." A third, who is in a responsible government position at Washington, wrote me: "Europe seems determined to ruin itself. There won't be much left of it that's worth while after they are through with their fighting. You must find it very depressing." And still another, who supplies editorial opinion for a most widely read weekly, wrote: "Out here in California no one talks about the war, thank heaven! They don't seem to know it is going on." Etc., etc.

I cite these random remarks of my correspondents as typical of a certain prevalent American attitude towards the war, illustrating a curious timidity and dislike of the disagreeable in any form, also of an irritating parochialism of thought, which makes us as a nation still seem to the European mind singularly immature. This mood is due in part, no doubt, to that almost hysterical desire which we have as a people to be comfortable and joyous, not to experience anything disagreeable if avoidable. That spiritual attitude has been elevated to the dignity of a religious cult in some circles. The taint of it has eaten more deeply than we realize into the temper of our people, as we shall discover when our hour of crisis comes. War, according to this popular creed, is violence, repugnant to our best instincts, is wrong, evil; therefore war should not exist; it does not exist for us! We mustn't talk about it or think about it, lest it should become a fact. Is there anything more nauseatingly silly? More dangerous when tested by the realities of life?

Another cause for this evasive attitude of mind is the widespread conviction, cultivated by pacifists, that this war is happily not our affair. The maxim of our forefathers about not mixing in European "quarrels" is an excuse for cowardice and blindness of vision. Such Americans like to believe that we as a nation have no more concern in the present European war than a peaceable family in one block has with the domestic upheavals of an unfortunate family in the next block. The part of prudence is to ignore politely all evidences of the unpleasantness, to profess good offices, and to keep on friendly terms with all the belligerents. That is our national attitude. No, the mess seems to me on the home side of the Atlantic, not on the European side—a mess of hyphenated disloyalty and of American timidity and weak thinking.

THE impression that such an attitude makes on the American in Europe is painful, whether it be expressed in personal letters or in newspaper and magazine comment or in diplomatic "notes." It makes him impatient with the provincialism of his own people, ashamed for their transparent selfishness, astonished that human values should have got so fatally twisted in our fat, comfortable world. . . .

I did not go to Europe for entertainment. It would be indecent to take the world war as a moving spectacle, a colossal sensation. One can leave that vulgarity to the professional war correspondent. I went to Europe to get a better understanding, a more serious point of view than those I have cited. I did not find Europe "depressing," not that part of it in which I traveled and lived—Italy and France. It may be depressing in London, for much the same reason that it is depressing in America, because the English people have not successfully roused themselves as a nation to take a serious view of the war. The atmosphere of France is anything but "depressing"! There are many sad aspects of life in a country that has been invaded and war ridden for an entire year, much bitter sorrow that must touch even the most casual stranger to the depths of his being. But sorrow and suffering, even tragedy, are not in themselves "depressing"—one of the many elemental commonplaces that war sternly teaches.

Hardships are not depressing, loss of property and life, griefs are not depressing, if they are nobly incurred and nobly borne. The lesson of every great catastrophe is that death and destruction are not depressing. Anybody who has talked with a citizen of San Francisco after the great earthquake and fire has heard that instead of being depressed by their losses the people of that stricken city were lifted to undreamed-of heights of effort, and all remember the disaster as the most significant event in their lives. Every man or woman who has really lived will echo this conviction that the unforgettable, the memorable moments are not unusually the pleasurable ones—large living is mingled often with grief.

THE European war is a cataclysm. It is one now—it has not passed. Every man, woman, or child within the limit of his comprehension, has been so absorbed in it, so drawn into the terrific drama of it, that there is no time for those egotistical reflections that create "depression." Every one—at least in France—is striving with tense energies for one supreme end—to expel the invader from the patrie, to make a repetition of the catastrophe impossible for generations to come. They are so busy as a nation about this supremely important business of their lives that they have no time for repining. "The time for mourning will come later," a brave man said to me, who had lost seven out of a family circle of seventeen. One reads this high resolve in the faces of the women in black one passes in the street. It is not the time for selfish tears, but for renewed efforts to help others who have cause to weep.

The spectacle of an entire people animated by such a high spirit is anything but "depressing." It is the most exhilarating experience in the world, and the exalted spirit is contagious. It stirs any one with a shred of human sympathy in him to throw off his coat and try to help in some little way. That is why the cause of France has attracted so many ardent young Americans to her service, not a few in the ranks of the foreign legion of the army.

Whenever the self can be eliminated or forgotten, the human being becomes, if not happy, at least spiritually healthy. The average Frenchman and French woman have forgotten themselves, have risen to that larger objectivity about living which is the blessing that disaster brings. Possibly war alone can endow humanity in the large with this enormous spiritual impulse. There are so many sons and fathers and mothers and wives in a war like this who have had to forget their own petty selves, to realize that living means something more than the attainment of comfort and happiness! In their presence one loses personal preoccupations and looks upon life from a larger angle of vision. And that is why I did not find Europe "depressing."

THE first sensation of depression I had had in four months came when I reached America one August afternoon. The human note was depressing. It was voiced first by a young reporter of whom I inquired the state of mind at home about Germany, whom our government was still vainly trying to hold "strictly accountable" for murder deliberately committed months before. The reporter replied in the vernacular: "O, most folks think it better to take a little smut from the kaiser and keep out of trouble and make some money out of the war." Further experience with American opinion has not greatly improved upon this vernacular expression of the national mood. We don't like "backing down" and swallowing insults, but we don't want "trouble," and we do want to improve this golden opportunity of becoming the richest nation in the world.

The prosperous and the timid among us were shuddering lest we be "dragged into the European mess." Many other amiable Americans, who believe that war is always wicked under all circumstances, were praying that the president might be kept in the paths of peace. Some Americans of a more boisterous temperament believed in "doing something," but had no clear idea of what to do, except abuse the government. It was a "mess," extremely depressing to the American who had been in contact with people who knew exactly what they were doing and why. It was also humorous; one day the country was in a "crisis," the next the crisis passed with an immense sigh of relief, because somebody in Berlin or Washington had discovered a new modification of that awkward phrase "strict accountability." Meanwhile national dignity has gone down the wind.

THERE is another side of American life which the returned American finds "depressing"—the good time side. We are as hard at it as ever, trying to give ourselves a good time, in fashionable resorts, in country clubs, wherever two or three are gathered together with "easy money" to spend. While the world is in the agony of its greatest decision, while fate waits close at our own doors, Americans still feverishly chase that good time. The sight of the wounded and the dying in the hospitals, of the cripples on the streets, of war widows and orphans, is not so "depressing" as the sight of America trying to preserve the remains of her dignity, make money, and have a good time.

WOMAN

By Edgar Saltus.

THAT the recent and emphatic pronouncement of three eastern states against woman suffrage will be revised sooner or later is perhaps obvious. None the less the revision is more likely to be later than sooner. The education of majorities is always slow and must be in this instance, which involves the whole doctrine of feminine inferiority.

That theory, generally held because generally ingrained, originated with Christianity, or, more exactly, with St. Paul, who in reminding women that man was created in the image of God, while she was but created for him, enjoined on her silence and submission.

The doctrine, when advanced, had at least the merit of novelty. It was Corinth that heard it first, and there women were at the time much as they are here today, with this difference, they were better educated and better looking.

To Roman ears it was also new. According to a law codified on the fifth of the twelve tables, a wife was a being without influence or initiative; a creature in the hands of man; a domestic animal over whom he had the right of life and death; a slave, regarded as mentally irresponsible, and of whom he was owner and judge.

Such was the law, and such it remained, a dead letter, nullified by a reason profoundly human. Rome in making the husband despotic made him monogamous as well. He was strictly restricted to one wife. As a consequence the lady, while theoretically a chattel, became—what woman with her husband to herself and no rivals to fear almost invariably does become—supreme. Legally the property of her husband, actually he was hers.

That was during the republic. In the Rome of the Cæsars woman, as displayed in the pages of the satirists, was completely emancipated, free to do as she liked, to imitate men at their worst, to fight like them and with them for power, to dabble in the bloody dramas of state, to climb on the throne and kill there or be killed.

It was during that orgy that the Pauline doctrine was advanced. It was therefore new. But it would have been new even in Assyria, where there were goddesses who fevered, perhaps, but who freed.

THE subsequent Islamic treatment of women came primarily from an excess of delicacy. Among the peris of his earthly paradise the Moslem was courteous and gallant, and if in the harem, which he did not invent—it was a legacy from Solomon—he secluded them, it was in order that their beauty might not be admired by strangers and they be affronted by the ardor of covetous eyes.

That certainly was very delicate. Meanwhile in Christian Europe the Pauline doctrine survived. In the second council of Macon it was debated whether woman should not be regarded as beyond the pale of humanity and as belonging to a degree intermediary between man and beast. Otherwise, throughout the middle ages it was as the weaker vessel that she was defined. In the brighter renaissance any husband was authorized to beat her, providing the beating were so moderate that death did not ensue. And yet already Chrysostom, with a better appreciation of the value of words and of the lady, had defined her as danger in its most delectable form.

Chrysostom was a good old saint. Today, while many men who are not saints accept his view, few of them hold to Paul's. Largely it is recognized that both sexes are on a footing of equality, not because they are equally strong but because they are equally weak; not because they are equally intelligent but because they are equally stupid. Fundamentally the difference between them is the length of the hair, but not always the length of the ears.

Suffragism does not advance these platitudes. It takes them for granted. For suffragism is not an insurrection of woman against man, but of woman against herself, or, more exactly, against the defects developed in and about her by reason of the Pauline injunction. Weighted for centuries by it, she became man's inferior not merely in his estimation but in her own. The idea had become ancestrally ingrained. Consequently, barring the inevitable exceptions, woman became either a parasite or a drudge, either a doll or a dunce, and in either rôle extremely unsatisfactory, particularly to herself, and so remained until, awakening gradually but surely to a realization that that was all wrong, that individually a woman is quite as good as a man and generally much better, the suffragette appeared, flanked by the larger feminist.

Today in England it is currently held that after the war the former will have her way, and might have had it sooner had it not been for the tactics which caused Mrs. Pankhurst and the rest of the affiliated to be regarded less as man's equal, perhaps, than as equal to anything.

THAT we in this country should be more conservative than the English does not seem humanly possible. One may assume, therefore, that sooner or later here, too, the suffragette will prevail, but not the larger feminist. For while as a nation we are great on entertaining, we will hardly care to banquet her, and even if we did she would not come.

The larger feminist does not approve of entertainments, or of any of the good things of life, or even of the bad ones, which are sometimes superior. The larger feminist approves of nothing with which men have to do.

For the larger feminists, some of the largest at least, would abolish the husband, "put him out of business," as one of them expressed it, and otherwise accept man, if at all, merely as a biological factor, "slinking in and out," as another pleasantly pictured him, "like a tomcat."

There you have a serious view of a comic subject. But it will hardly become general. Most women would rather be dead than out of the fashion, and their present modes are still too feminine to permit of any vagaries of the feline kind.

ON the other hand, these modes, while still feminine, are none the less becoming masculine, and why not? In the existing social order any change might do us good. Besides, of all men the American is the most naturally chivalrous. In no country are women treated with greater courtesy than here. Nationally we have no manners, or rather we have them in plenty and all of them bad. Yet generally every one of them is in abeyance where women are concerned. Add these items up and it seems inevitable that sooner or later men will yield and suffragism prevail. Then, sooner or later also, a woman will be president of the United States.

There, too, why not? Victoria made a very good queen and transformed the throne from the rickety chair that it had been into one of the most solid bits of furniture. Conversely, some of our presidents have made so many mistakes that it would be impossible for any woman, however gifted, to make more.

War as It Is.

The following letter from a member of the American ambulance corps in France is one of the most vivid accounts of warfare yet published. It will be published in two installments, the second of which will appear on this page next week.

By William R. Berry.

BEFORE TAHURE, Oct. 16, 1915.

My Dear Norton: My last letter to you about the doings of the American volunteer motor ambulance corps was written in June from a château in the Somme. Now, four strenuous months later, I am writing again—but this time after the great battle round Tahure the last week in September, from a khaki colored tent pitched with others in a small pine grove on the war scarred flank of a chalk ridge in Champagne.

The corps now consists of sixty ambulances and is treated officially and otherwise by the French commanding officers exactly as an army ambulance corps, which, taken with the Croix de Guerre given to your brother, our commanding officer, as it was officially announced, "for conspicuous devotion to duty and notable sangfroid while under severe and continuous shell fire," shows the appreciation in which the corps is held, of which we are very proud.

It was toward the end of August that orders came to leave at once our base at Baizieux and to follow the Eleventh corps into Champagne, where, rumor had it at even that early date, a great French offensive would be undertaken. We moved by easy stages, for it was known that time did not press, since the Eleventh had been in trenches before Bray and Albert for many months on end and it was common knowledge in its ranks that there would be a substantial period of "repose" before renewed action might be expected.

Our route lay through Amiens with its sandbag protected cathedral; Compiegne, a forsaken jewel set in the midst of its great forest, whose aisles are now as silent and unfrequented as though the "black death" stalked once more through Louis' kingdom; Epernay, nestling snugly in the hollowed arm of the Marne, her fruitful hills a mild example of that greater vineclad barrier to the eastward toward which in these days the eyes of every Frenchman turn with longing; and finally through Chalons to a wretched village of a hundred houses, swarming with encamped cavalry, where we were ordered to content ourselves "en repose"—a doubtful boon in such a spot. Many of us found billets only on stretchers in our cars or in the open; a few fortunate ones chanced on beds in the little two roomed cottages of the villagers, where there was always a polished seashell on the mantelpiece marked "Souvenir de Boulogne" and on the wall an agricultural diploma.

The first few weeks were indeed "repose," broken only occasionally by evacuations from rear line hospitals to the rail head, for we were nearly twenty kilometers behind the line, where, too, there was little or no fighting. And besides our own corps, the Eleventh, was resting in villages behind us.

Gradually, however, the war swept back to us like the rolling of a great drum heard at first but faintly in the distance. Rumors came first, whispering and distorted; then actualities in the shape of everything that moves on wheels. Enormous motor trucks, hundreds in dust choked procession, loaded to capacity with freshly cut timbers and shellproof steel shields; endless four horse supply trains, the curses of their postilion riders drowned in their own dust and clattering rattle; artillery of every field caliber thundering through the chalk clouds day and night, the gun crews a mask of white from head to foot like goblin millers, but the breech blocks of the guns swaddled with the tender care a Turkish mother gives her infant.

Cavalry and infantry, field kitchens and staff motors, everything, in fact, that constitutes an army in the field, rattled and banged, marched and trotted by us towards the front until the powder white dust of Champagne hung over the roads in hundred foot clouds and the eyes grew weary, the ears tired of sight and sound. I said, "Everything that constitutes an army," but there remains the single ingredient that makes or breaks, that has become the new god of new war, before which armies bow, while those who serve him conquer—ammunition!

Everywhere, on every road, at every hour of the day or night, it rumbled slowly past us at a foot pace. Shells in the proper limbers of the seventy-fives; bigger shells lining the bottoms of country carts and wagons; shells cached in dugouts or under tarpaulins in the open fields. Shells! Shells! in such staggering profusion that one half believed they sprang full charged and finished from the ground like the harvest of spearsmen from the dragon's teeth that in the old Greek story Jason sowed.

There came a day when orders reached us to move forward to Croix-en-Champagn, where a huge temporary wooden hospital had been erected just out of range of the heavy German guns, and where a portion of a small wood had been set aside for us as a temporary camp and base. Tranquil enough the countryside looked as we moved out of our "repose." The roads, too, were comparatively free, for everything was "up" and ready that could be got there, the very voices of the occasional laggard soldiers who trudged forward in full marching kit thrilling with a note of accomplishment and relief as they shouted to us: "Ca commence!" And commence it did, indeed.

As we reached the wood assigned to us, which lay upon a ridge whose further slope looked out over desolate country towards the enemy, the guns, which really never cease their grumbling, began to speak in earnest. Faster and faster their mutterings followed upon each other. Faster, and even faster. To the right, in front, to the left, until their voices merged into one continuous roar, as though a giant breaker of the sea should thunder on a beach and not recede or lose its volume. All that day they never ceased, and all day long those distant hillsides, scarred and seamed with white lines which marked the enemy's trenches cut in the chalk, lay smothered under dense smoke and dust that rose above them like a cyclone cloud in which were yellow flashes like great sparks that told of hell below.

Two days and two nights we watched and waited, accompanied always by the guns. Early on the third morning we received orders to split up into five groups; two to take up their station at noon at the mouths of two communication trenches a mile apart, each of which led up to the first line trenches, where our corps, 20,000 strong, lay on a five kilometer front, and down which our wounded would be carried by hand to our cars. The remaining three groups were to stand by at three field hospitals in the rear, prepared to clear them as they filled.

GUNMAN SOUGHT IN TAXI MURDER IS UNDER COVER

Eddie Dougherty, leader of one of the most desperate bands of gunmen that ever infested the "bad lands" of the west side, is being hunted by the police for the murder of Martin Hanahan, a chauffeur, killed in a mysterious shooting in Lytle street on the night of Nov. 9.

On his death bed in the county hospital Hanahan told his mother, sister, and Policeman Walsh of the Maxwell street station that Dougherty shot him. Hanahan's dying statement was kept secret by the police until yesterday in the hope Dougherty would be trapped before he was aware of the murder charge against him. It is the second murder charge against him in the last three years.

Five Men in Gang.

Four men were with Dougherty on the night Hanahan was shot. Who they were the police have not learned. It is suspected one of them was Eugene Doyle, shot and killed on Friday night by William Mead in the rooming house of Mrs. Anna Schmidt, 218 South Sangamon street. A newspaper clipping describing the Hanahan murder was in Doyle's pocket when he was killed. The police have learned that Doyle and Dougherty were companions in many drinking bouts.

Dougherty, who is 24 years old, was arrested three years ago with J. W. (Red) Kinsella and Fred F. Davey for the murder of Bernard Gannon, stabbed to death in a holdup at Polk and Laflin streets. Gannon had stopped in a saloon on his way home and flashed a roll of money. Dougherty, Kinsella, and Davey were identified as the men who trailed him out. Gannon fought his assailants and died with a $10 bill clutched in his fist.

Dougherty Was Acquitted.

Dougherty and his two companions were acquitted before Judge Brentano. The acquittal of the trio almost caused a riot in the court.

Dougherty, "Red" Kinsella, and "Red" Bolton were arrested last winter for the robbery of Harris Dick, president of the Western Dairy company. Mr. Dick was robbed of $3,000 by three highwaymen in Edgemont avenue, near Loomis street. Kinsella was sent to the penitentiary, but Dougherty and Bolton went free.

Hanahan drove a taxicab for Roy Buxton. On the night he was shot he was climbing the front steps of his home at 1111 Lytle street, when a taxicab driven by Buxton drew up at the curb. Buxton asked him if he knew any of the five men who were in the cab. Hanahan stepped on the running board and one of the quintet ordered Buxton to drive north.

Shot Five Times.

He drove half a block and stopped. The cab door opened. Hanahan caught one man by the arm. "Don't you know me, or don't you want to know me?" he asked.

"We'll settle this right now," and fired five shots into Hanahan.

The two men stepped back into the taxicab. The one with the revolver pointed it at Buxton's head. "Drive on," he commanded. Buxton obeyed. According to his story, he drove to Taylor street, to Sibley, to Polk, back to Lytle, to Harrison, to Loomis, to Jackson, to Throop.

At Jackson and Throop the five men got out, gave Buxton $2, and told him to "beat it while the going's good."

Hanahan was found by a neighbor and sent to the county hospital.

"He would tell us nothing about the shooting for a time," said Lieut. J. D. McGeean of Maxwell street yesterday. "'I won't tell,' he kept saying. 'Wait till I get well.' Finally we sent his mother and sister with Policeman Walsh to him. Walsh told him he was dying and begged him to clear up the mystery of the shooting. 'Eddie Dougherty shot me,' he said with his dying breath. Walsh asked him who were the four other men. 'It was Eddie and the gang' was all he could get out of him."

Celebrating $100 Robbery.

It developed yesterday that "Eddie and the gang" on the night of the shooting were celebrating a $100 haul made earlier in the evening by the robbery of a Chinaman near Polk and Paulina streets. The gang is known to have driven in a black touring car to a saloon at Twelfth and Loomis streets at 11 o'clock at night. From there they drove to the White Front saloon, in Van Buren near Paulina, and remained until closing time. Just before 1 o'clock Mr. Reutenberg, the proprietor, called for Buxton's taxicab for them. When Buxton drove up they were waiting for him on the sidewalk.

"From the orders given to Buxton," said Lieut. McGeean, "the police are convinced the murder of Hanahan was carefully planned. The man who turned out to be Dougherty ordered Buxton to drive first to Twelfth and Lytle streets and then drive north half a block. That brought the cab to where Hanahan lived. We believe Buxton was an innocent tool of the murderer. He unwittingly called Hanahan to his fate.

Cause of Feud Not Known.

"What the cause of the feud between Dougherty and Hanahan was, we have not learned."

Dougherty is believed to be in hiding among his west side haunts. Every policeman and detective was given orders yesterday to look for him and to be prepared for a battle. Dougherty is said to be a cocaine user and is known as a desperate fighter.

William Mead, who killed Eugene Doyle, is a prisoner in Desplaines street station. Doyle had accused Mead of planning to "turn him up" to the police. With two other men, he attacked Mead later and Mead killed him. One of the men with Doyle is known to the police as "Big Bill" Smith. With Doyle dead, "Big Bill" Smith's possible connection with the Dougherty gang of gunmen is being looked into. The Doyle inquest was continued till Nov. 24 to allow the police time for this investigation.

BOY MILLIONAIRE SUED FOR FEES BY ATTORNEYS

Attorneys Who Won Legal Battle for 16 Year Old Heir Ask $60,000.

Charles H. Nichols, who recently won a legal battle for a $1,000,000 share in his grandparents' estate, is watching with interest a proceeding brought by his attorneys to collect from him fees totaling $60,000. But watching is about all that Nichols can do, for he is only 16 years old and has no say in the matter, which lies entirely within the jurisdiction of the Probate court.

Judge Henry Horner of the Probate court yesterday listened to opinions of attorneys relative to petitions for the fees filed by former Judge Charles S. Cutting and Attorney Robert Van Sands. Mr. Cutting values his services at $10,000 and Mr. Van Sands believes he has done $50,000 worth of work for the boy.

Mother Wants Part.

Young Nichols' mother, Mrs. Lillian M. Nichols, who previous to the legal victory worked fourteen hours a day as a seamstress to support her son, also has filed a petition for remuneration for her services.

The legal battle for the estate covered three years. Litigations were carried on for shares in the estates of Mrs. Abbie Nichols, the boy's grandmother, who left $3,000,000, and of his great grandfather, Ezekiel Morrison, whose property was valued at $1,000,000. Mrs. Carrie M. Tyler, an aunt, had attacked young Nichols' legitimacy.

Attorney Van Sands told the court he had traveled to all parts of the country to obtain documents to prove the boy's birth. Attorney Cutting claims his fee for work done in constructing the will of the great grandfather, so as to conserve the boy's interest in the estate. It took him two months to construct the will, he said, and it was largely due to his careful punctuation that the court upheld the cause of young Nichols.

Loop Sites in Estate.

The bulk of the boy's estate includes the site on which the Planters hotel is erected and the property at the northeast corner of Clark and Madison streets. It yields an annual income of $16,200.

Attorneys John Barton Payne and John S. Miller both informed the court they believed $10,000 was a reasonable fee for Mr. Cutting, but Attorney Payne said he would have to know more in detail the work done by Mr. Van Sands before he would feel qualified to express an opinion as to his charges. Attorneys Miller and Cutting said they believed Mr. Van Sands' fee was not exorbitant.

Judge Horner awarded each attorney $5,000 on account and announced he would decide on the full fees on Dec. 4.

WITNESS EXPECTED TO GET SPLIT ON CONVICTIONS.

BRIDEGROOM, 71, NOW GETS CARE

Aged Evanston Pastor Says He Was Sorely in Need of Attention.

WEDS FORMER NURSE.

The Rev. Thomas Craven, 1634 Chicago avenue, Evanston, the 71 year old bridegroom, gave a TRIBUNE reporter his philosophy of marriage yesterday. He was married Thursday evening to Mrs. Susan White Donaldson, widow of the late Attorney F. S. Donaldson. The bride is 45.

"My first wife died three years ago, after we had lived together forty-five years," Dr. Craven said. "Since then I have been living one way or another and eating one kind of food and another. It became too lonesome and too monotonous to live alone.

Wife Cares for Him.

"I believe a man should be of as much service to humanity as possible, and he can only be that when he has a wife to care for him. For instance, this morning I went to my Sunday school mission work in Chicago as usual and got wet and chilled. When I came home my wife saw that. She immediately got me dry clothing and put me to bed. If I had had no wife I probably would have let it go and got sick.

"I don't see why persons of years should hold back from marriage if there is compatibility. I expect we will differ in many things, because each has an individuality; but we will have a pleasant life."

Bride Former Nurse.

Mrs. Craven is a nurse. She nursed the first Mrs. Craven during her illness and has acted as a nurse for Dr. Craven since the first Mrs. Craven's death.

A wedding reception will be given the couple at the Halsted Street Methodist mission tomorrow morning at which a huge wedding cake will be cut by the bride and distributed among the Sunday school pupils.

Dr. Craven has been identified with the mission since 1866.

DADS INVENTED TOBACCO, BUT INDIAN BOYS SHUN IT.

TACOMA, Wash.—[Special.]—Because they say they feel the life of the Indian race depends on clean habits of the young men of this generation, eighty-three Indian boys in Cushman school have voluntarily signed a pledge to abstain from tobacco in any form.

Two weeks ago the eighty-three boys and seventeen more pledged themselves to abstain forever from intoxicating liquors.

A hundred Indian boys met in the assembly hall of the school to vote on the question. The seventeen who did not sign the pledge have never used tobacco.

STATE TO FIND THE LIMIT OF WORK DAY FOR WOMAN.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—[Special.]—The Pittsburgh branch of the United States public health service is to assist the Wisconsin industrial commission in determining the number of hours a day a woman can work without endangering her health. Upon the results of the investigation will depend amendments to laws regulating the employment of women and girls in that state.

WETS GET DRYS HILARIOUS AND DELAY "PROHI" LAWS.

ROME, Ga.—[Special.]—Addressing the North Georgia conference of the Southern Methodist church, in session here, Dr. G. W. Eichelberger of the Anti-Saloon league charged that the "wet" minority of the Georgia legislature had been enabled to prolong the "filibuster" against drastic prohibition bills by getting prohibition members intoxicated and carrying them on the floor of the house in that condition.

"But we finally broke the filibuster," said Eichelberger, "and the prohibition majority is enacting bills that will make prohibition prohibit."

The conference went on record as being dissatisfied with any measures that permit drinking even in the home. The measure which the extra session of the legislature will pass will allow a man to keep a limited quantity in his home.

SAFEBLOWING NOISE LAID TO COLLEGE BOYS' PRANKS

BALDWIN, Kas.—Baker university students were blamed for one thing of which they were not guilty.

Townspeople who heard three explosions in rapid succession at 2:30 o'clock in the morning turned over in bed and yawned: "It's those college boys again." Instead it was postoffice robbers.

The postoffice safe and two others in the same building were wrecked, postal and money orders funds being taken.

GIRL TEACHER SO PRETTY BOYS CAN'T STOP; SMACK!

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—Miss Mathilde Weill of Wheeling, W. Va., a pretty young substitute school teacher has been popular always with her pupils, but never until she was assigned to a class in public school No. 30, Manhattan, did her popularity reach such an alarming stage as to drag her into court.

When she took charge of her new class, however, she made such an immediate hit that two of the boys threw their arms about her and tried to kiss her. She had them arrested and appeared against them in the Children's court. The boys were 11 and 13 years old. They told the judge that when they saw Miss Weill come into the school room they were so struck by her beauty and sweetness that they could not resist the temptation to kiss her.

Justice Collins discharged the boys with a reprimand and criticised the board of education for assigning a pretty girl substitute teacher to an ungraded class.

BOSTON.—[Special.]—Bennett Solomon, 17, of 31 Auburn street, West End, the newsboy who has been awarded the annual scholarship to Harvard college by the Boston Newsboys' Protective union, is the youngest newsboy who has been awarded a Harvard scholarship. He has been in this country but seven years.

NONSUPPORTING LOAFER GETS BUSY IN JAIL CELL.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—[Special.]—Joseph Swanson, serving a term in the county jail for failure to provide for his children, has proved his ability to provide for them if he cared to try.

During three weeks in jail he modeled a wooden replica of the building in which he is imprisoned with a saw, jack-knife, and a pot of glue. The windows are made of celluloid panes.

Swanson has presented his model to Sheriff Barnet, who has placed it in his collection of curiosities.

DOUBLE INHERITANCE TAX WHEN PAIR DIE TOGETHER.

DENVER.—[Special.]—Because the wife of William Shellabarger, who was killed in an automobile accident at the Overland crossing, died later than her husband, a double inheritance tax on the estate will be collected by Leslie E. Hubbard, state inheritance tax appraiser.

According to estimates by the state officials, Shellabarger left an estate worth $250,000.

He willed the entire estate to his wife. His wife, who died after he did, willed her property to three nephews.

Health and Beauty from Electricity

YOU would ridicule the idea of turning lead into gold. Yet it is quite as wonderful to change the dangerous shock-producing electric current that lights your home into a harmless, beneficial High Frequency current, which pleasantly flows through your system with soothing, stimulating, vital, healing effect. The international High Frequency Violet Ray machine may be attached to the electric light fixture in your home as easily as you screw in an incandescent bulb. When you turn on the current it passes into the machine to be marvelously transformed and flows into the vacuum of the glass electrode in a flood of beautiful violet rays.

When the electrode is then applied to any part of the body the High Frequency current passes into the system without shock or violence, destroying germs, driving out poisons, stimulating circulation and strengthening the nerves.

Physicians Use It

Nikola Tesla, father of wireless telegraphy, was the discoverer of the High Frequency current. It was at once taken up by the scientific world, and the medicinal use of electricity has been more and more built around it with marvelous results. Leading physicians and the largest hospitals, both in this countr and Europe, use the High Frequency Violet Ray constantly Repeated demonstrations have fully proven that it is not only powerful curative force, but one that may be used with entir. safety in the most delicate cases.

The great expense and the complicated nature of the apparatus necessary to transform an ordinary current into the High Frequency Violet Ray have hitherto precluded its more general use. These difficulties have at last been overcome by the

Treatments for dandruff, falling hair, itching scalp, etc., are given by combing the hair with this unique electrode. It is simply a big comb of glass dispensing the wonderful Violet Ray from its vacuum teeth

It is a forceful germicide, killing the microbes that cause eczema, falling hair and similar afflictions.
It stimulates circulation, acting as an internal massage, far more efficacious than mere external vibrations. It thus banishes cold feet, pimples, stiff joints and many other ills, apparently dissimilar, but all due to poor circulation. It drives the poison of rheumatism from the joints and stimulates the blood to carry it out of the system.
It quickly produces a rosy complexion, far more enduring than that resulting from mere surface massage.

All this is fully explained in our booklet, which will be sent free on request, if you are unable to visit our display stations shown above and see this machine in operation.

Corns are removed by utilizing this pointed electrode, which discharges a mild spark at the corn and destroys it forever. It is easier to operate than any corn "cure" and lasting in its effects.

PRIMARY CASE FOOLS INDIANA'S 100 CANDIDATES

Wonder What Supreme Court Will Say on Constitutionality of Law.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Democrats, Republicans, and Progressives alike are up in the air in this state just at this time over the primary law which was passed by the last legislature and under which a primary election will be held, if held, for the first time on March 7, 1916.

The reason is that every one seems to be in doubt as to whether the law or the vital parts of it will be held constitutional by the Supreme court of Indiana, all the members of which, it so happens, are Democrats. The law provides for the direct nominations of all candidates for state offices except governor. It also provides for a preferential vote for governor and United States senator, the conventions of the several parties being bound by the law to recognize the person for whom the preferential vote was cast as the nominee of the party for office in case that nominee receives a majority of all the votes cast for the office for which he is a candidate.

100 Candidates Now.

As there are now something like 100 candidates for the various state offices, and as there likely will be twenty-five or thirty more when some of the Progressives announce their candidacies, it can readily be seen that all the politicians in Indiana are on the fence as to just what course to take to procure the nominations of certain desirable candidates.

The fact that the law was passed by a Democratic legislature, and will be finally passed on by a court composed of Democratic judges, has nothing to do with the question of the constitutionality of the law, it is admitted, as fundamental constitutional questions are involved in the law, and there is no doubt that the court will make its finding solely on what its judgment is as to the constitutionality of the law.

The greatest confusion exists among the candidates for governor and United States senator, because of the first and second choice provisions of the law, although, of course, all the candidates for state office are concerned, although not to such a degree as the candidates for the two higher offices.

Five for Senator.

In the Republican party there are now five avowed candidates for the nomination for senator, and there is another man who is said to be considering entering the race. There are five men seriously in the race for the Republican nomination for governor. There are three candidates for the Democratic nomination for governor and one more candidate almost certain to come out later. There is so far only one candidate for the Democratic nomination for senator. No contests have yet appeared among the Bull Moose candidates for state offices.

The primary law really was passed in the last legislature, not because the Democratic machine candidate wished it passed, but because a minority of the Democrats in the legislature threatened to make trouble if the law was not passed. The minority Democrats, headed by John R. Jones of Plymouth, and the late Senator Elias M. Rinear of Bluffton, fought so hard and attracted so much attention by their fight that the Democrats finally were almost compelled to pass a primary law.

Call In New Man.

They did not wish to pass the bill which Jones and Rinear introduced in the legislature, however, so they called in Evan Stotsenburg of New Albany to frame an acceptable law for them. Stotsenburg is admittedly one of the most able Democratic attorneys in Indiana. Recently he was appointed attorney general of Indiana by Gov. Ralston following the death of Richard M. Milburn who held the office.

Stotsenburg framed a primary law which was acceptable, and it was passed although it was evident that the action of the machine Democrats in voting for the bill was reluctant as could be. That the bill was passed under pressure and that it was not expected to stand the test, even by those who voted for it, was seen in the next few weeks when Willis Thompson, employed by the Democratic state committee as publicity agent, began to write articles attacking the law. Thompson, speaking for the Democratic state committee presumably, called the law "a piece of political patchwork" and said it was so evident that the law was not constitutional that a blind man could see it, or words to that effect.

Compelled Resignation.

The law at that time worked a hardship on the Democratic state committee, for it compelled the resignation of several members of the committee who held elective or appointive offices in the state. Now, however, since the vacancies caused by these resignations have been filled, all except one, the committee seems to have changed its mind on the merit of the primary law, for Thompson is now defending the law with as much fervor as he attacked it only a few months ago.

Three separate suits have been brought to test the constitutionality of the law. One of these was filed by a Progressive at Vincennes. Another was filed by a Republican at New Albany. The third was filed recently by a former Progressive in Indianapolis, at the instance of the Republican state committee. The first suit, that at Vincennes, has been dismissed by the plaintiff. The second suit was taken to trial and resulted in Judge Paris of the Floyd Circuit court holding the law constitutional, with the exception of section 11 of the law, which provides for the payment of fees by candidates for nominations.

Before Supreme Court.

This suit is now before the Supreme court on appeal. The third suit will be tried first before a Republican Circuit judge in Indianapolis and an appeal probably will be taken from his finding to the Supreme court, unless that court, in the meantime, decides the case now on appeal from New Albany.

It is pointed out that should a genuinely progressive Democrat come out for the nomination for governor he probably could be nominated at the direct primaries, if they are held, although should the question go to the state convention, Tom Taggart would again determine, as he has in previous years, who would be the candidate.

It is pointed out that if a primary is held Jim Watson would make such a poor showing that the Republican convention would be afraid to nominate him, even if Watson succeeds in his plan to force the Republican state committee to support him. It is also pointed out that no one man probably could get a majority of the first choice votes in the Republican race for a candidate for governor, although it is highly possible that one of the candidates, through second choice votes, might get a majority.

Candidates Up in Air.

So this is why every one is up in the air. No candidate knows just where to put his efforts, to getting the general votes for the primary, or to getting delegates for the state convention. No one of the thousands of supporters of the various candidates knows where to put his greatest efforts and so every one is at a loss to know how to proceed. However, it is said the Supreme court will recognize the timeliness of the question and give the consideration of the appeal on the primary law precedence over other questions now before the court. If the appeal took its regular course before the court it probably would not be decided for about one year.

Despite the fact that they are up in the air on the primary question, the Republican candidates for senator are still waging a merry little scrap. Watson, Miller, and Robinson are still the leading candidates and all three are going at a merry pace, considering that it is four months almost until the primaries are scheduled, and several months more until the state convention.

Two more straw votes have been held in Indiana on the Republican nominees, and each shows different things, although each tends to show that the senatorial contest is between three men and the governorship contest is between two men. Of course, these straw votes get tiresome after a while and show nothing, but just now they help get a preliminary line on the strength of the Republican candidates.

Straw Vote Results.

In a straw vote taken by the Covington Republican, in Fountain county, near the Illinois state line, the following were the results:

	First choice.	Second choice.
SENATOR.
Robinson	84	39
Miller	75	58
Watson	[illegible]	19
Taylor	6	18
Hanly	1	0
Olds	0	3
GOVERNOR.

La Follette	4	6
Taft	4	14
Cummins	2	..
Hadley	..	1
Col. Goethals	..	1
Senator Weeks	..	3
Senator Sherman	..	2

A vote taken in Hendricks county gave Hugh Miller and James P. Goodrich overwhelming majorities. This district contains a great many Quakers, and it is evident that they supported Miller and Goodrich because of their strong temperance tendencies. Both Goodrich and Miller are known to be strong temperance men, as Goodrich teaches one of the largest Sunday school classes in the state and Miller formerly was a professor in a Christian college.

Watson Falls Behind.

In this vote it was remarkable that James E. Watson did not even make a respectable show. All the second choice votes—that is, the great majority of them—went for Robinson.

The fact that Watson is fast losing strength is shown by the attitude the prospective county, township, and city candidates are taking toward him.

PEARLS SMUGGLED IN TAIL OF TOY DOG BY JAPANESE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—[Special.]—A little toy dog, with a stubby tail and a pointed nose, which would emit a bark like grunt when pressed, stood on the table in the office of Surveyor of the Port Wardell, surrounded by a collection of cultivated pearls. The tip of his tail was missing as was the end of his nose, both of which had been cut away by customs inspectors.

The dog was only one of many clever contrivances used by Y. Nakane, wealthy pearl merchant of Tokio, who was arrested recently when he made a declaration at the custom house, saying that he carried only $400 worth of pearls. An investigation of his baggage by Customs Inspector Brosman revealed pearls valued at more than $5,000.

An examination of a jewel case showed that it had a false bottom and pearls valued at $1,000 were revealed. This was the first lot to be discovered. While the case being taken apart Nakane drew from his pocket a dainty Japanese tobacco box and proceeded to roll a cigaret.

The beauty of the box attracted the attention of Surveyor Wardell, who asked to see it at closer range. The box when examined revealed another $1,000 worth of the precious gems. Nakane removed his coat to assist in the work of unpacking his cases and again Wardell was attracted by the beauty of a silk vest, made an examination and found that in the center of each of the buttons was set a small pearl which was so near the color of the shell-like button that the gems could only be detected by an expert.

HER SIDE BECOMES NUMB WHENEVER SHE USES PHONE.

WICHITA, Kas.—[Special.]—In Wichita there is one woman who canont use a telephone. She is not cripped in any way, can hear, talk, and enjoys the use of the phone as well as any one. But the reason she cannot use a phone is a case of nerves. Whenever she tries to use a telephone her right side becomes numb and several times has caused her to become unconscious.

Mrs. Lou E. Fisher of 1409 North Waco avenue is the woman who is thus afflicted. Several years ago Mrs. Fisher received a severe shock while using the telephone and since that her nerves have been affected. Whenever she takes down the receiver she states that her arm gradually becomes numb and then the right side of her body.

TIMES HIS OWN KILLING BY TRENCH STATISTICS.

BERKELEY, Cal.—[Special.]—News of the death in the French trenches recently of Lieut. John W. Barnett, graduate of the University of California and prominent in athletics, was received here today by John Stroud, graduate manager, and showed that the young officer was killed within a few days of the time limit he put on his life.

In the recent letter Barnett said he had been promoted to be a range finder:

"The average life of a range finder is thirty days," his letter said. "I have been on the job seventeen days. You will know soon whether or not I outlast the average."

I SAW SIX HUNDRED MEN BUY TWENTY-TWO MILLION DOLLARS' WORTH OF CHALMERS CARS IN FORTY MINUTES

The New Six-30 with 3400 Revolutions Per Minute Engine at $1050

It was an event—history. Not an ordinary dealers' convention. It was a crowd of six hundred human dynamos—the best lot of merchants I have ever seen assembled under one roof.

Mr. Chalmers called the new car the 3400, because the engine turns at a speed of 3400 revolutions per minute.

It is the fastest engine speed ever developed for stock car use in America.

Some cars turn up 2000; some 2200. Others do only 1400. There are one or two that reach 2600, and one that records 3000.

Such super-engine speed means great power from a small motor—a light-weight chassis, and, all told, a live, peppery car. In other words, it does what the big brute of a car used to do, only this new 3400 Chalmers is a lot faster in acceleration and more alert in every way. It is a six-cylinder car—the Chalmers Six-30.

When he told us the price—$1050, we were dumfounded.

Then he showed us the car. One glance was enough—it told a volume.

The stampede began. In forty very short minutes I saw 600 men buy $22,000,000 worth of those new 3400 Chalmers.

I bought all they would sell me. I wanted more! We all wanted more. We insisted upon more—begged for more.

Some recited census figures—others mentioned increase in wealth per capita in their communities. But it was no use. The Chalmers people said they simply could not build any more.

They took us, then, from the Convention Hall to another large building. A door was opened.

There before our very eyes stood a phalanx of these bright new Chalmers—not one, not two, but hundreds of them.

It was a shock to our optic nerves, and to our imagination—but a pleasant one.

For automobile dealers are used to going down to automobile conventions and taking a look at a pretty new model on a pedestal—then going home and waiting three months or more for deliveries. We certainly never expected to see more than one or two finished cars.

Asking for deliveries of a demonstrator before sixty days in previous years was like asking the Rhode Island Red to lay the Golden Egg.

Somebody got up and said that we would find a name tagged on each car and to go and get ours.

It was like sixty football teams going down the field on a punt.

I found my car. I drove her in the big parade—a $500,000 parade that turned into a $22,000,000 procession for Chalmers. She traveled all over Detroit on a three-mile-an-hour speed, never buckled; never heated up.

When the parade was over I got her out in the open and stepped on the little button.

I never before saw such acceleration.

I have felt under foot Brussels and Wilton, but never have I felt real Velvet until now.

It was magnificent.

Then I got out and lifted the bonnet and opened the throttle.

I ran her up and up and up, and the faster the little engine sped, the softer and smoother she ran. I understood then why they called her the 3400 Chalmers.

If there was one single throb left in her, my good right ear failed to record the irregularity.

I put the car over some of my own little hurdles and it gave me back the laugh. I could not tease her a bit.

Then I lost no time in getting her down here in the salesroom. For I wanted my own people to see it—you people. I knew you folks here at home would go wild over her the minute you saw her in action.

When I got back to the Chalmers plant, I got hold of Mr. Chalmers, took him aside and asked him how he could do it for $1050.

Now, Mr. Chalmers is a man of action.

When the war came he figured that the price of materials would rise. So he took advantage of a low market and bought.

If he had waited and built his car of materials purchased in the present market, the chances are his cost experts would have put a list price of $1400 or $1500 on the car.

Mr. Chalmers then explained to me what had been accomplished in the great Chalmers plant in the way of new practices and new operations and new equipment. You know that all Chalmers cars are manufactured—motors, clutches, transmissions, etc., all built from the raw in the great Chalmers shops—not assembled, not bought outside and assembled by Chalmers, but built completely in Chalmers Shops.

I went out and looked the plant over and I never stopped until I had been in every one of those twenty-two magnificent buildings. I saw every machine at work. I saw these new cars coming through. Enthusiasm was written large on every mechanic's face. Every man takes a pride in his good work.

I saw machines I never knew existed before. I saw new buildings. I saw great quantities of materials piled high all ready for the foundry. There was hustle in the air. There was prosperity. I caught it in the first building I entered.

Then I wanted to get back and tell you all about this magnificent new 3400 Chalmers—to show it to you—to let you "feel it."

To see it makes you reach for your check book—quick. It is here now. Come see it.

I am making deliveries in the order of sales.

GOPHERS BEAT BADGERS; TIE ILLINOIS FOR TITLE

Capt. Buck Saves Losers from Complete Rout in 20 to 3 Defeat.

SIMPSON BOOTS GOAL.

BY RING W. LARDNER.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—The favorite winter sport will be quarreling over the conference championship. Let them quarrel, so long as they don't mix us in it. Minnesota earned its right to argue by adding further trimmings to Wisconsin's already well trimmed team.

If Capt. Buck had died before the game the score would probably have been 50 to 0 in favor of the Gophers. But Capt. Buck lived and was in good health, and thirty points were thereby cut off the Gopher total. In other words, it wound up 20 to 3.

Badgers Start in Front.

The difference between this and Minnesota's other big games this year was that today the Gophers' opponents got off in front. Eber Simpson's place kick came shortly after the opening of so-called hostilities. Some folk thought it heralded a Badger victory. But we smart alecks knew better. We knew that no team that had been licked by Illinois and Chicago could consistently and forever withstand the Minnesota attack.

Wisconsin's jubilation over Simpson's score was its last. Thereafter there was nothing to the game but Minnesota, and only the time limit and Capt. Buck kept it from being worse than it was.

Overloaded Stand Falls.

Fearing the game itself would not supply enough excitement, somebody put on an extra thrill. The somebody was the person who allowed 5,000 Badger cheerers to pile into a temporary stand on the north side of the field. Just after the end of the first period the stand collapsed.

We who sat on the other side of the field could see the catastrophe before it happened. The seats began to waver and wabble at one end, they then caved from the starting point to the other extremity. The whole thing came off so slowly that you could almost count the people as they sank.

At first there was the usual calamity howling to the effect that hundreds had been killed, and so on. Investigation developed the facts that only about sixteen were injured, and less than half a dozen seriously.

Three People Badly Hurt.

The three people hurt worst were R. F. Roberts of Racine, who suffered a broken ankle; Mrs. Thomas of Milwaukee, whose injury was a duplicate of Mr. Roberts', and Mrs. Frank Gilbert of Madison, whose right ankle was badly twisted. The great majority of the occupants of the stand were male students.

The game was held up for ten minutes while the injured were cared for. The three unfortunates mentioned were conveyed to hospitals. The less seriously hurt and the ones who escaped with bruises or less stood up through the rest of the battle.

This made something of an overflow crowd and there were hundreds of people on the field of play at one time or another during the second half.

Stand O. K.'d by Officials.

Responsibility for the accident is denied by the athletic association. The engineering and architectural departments of the university are said to have erected the stand and pronounced it safe.

The crowd of 13,500 was well entertained in spite of the one-sidedness of the game and the fact that almost 12,000 were Badger sympathizers. Buck and his ill-fated bunch played hard enough to make the Gophers do their best.

Minnesota's offense was stopped more often than in the Chicago game, though the Gopher total of touchdowns was the same. Buck's defensive playing was probably the outstanding feature. After the first period Wisconsin's attack was null and void, and the Badger fans could cheer only for their team's brave defensive work.

Bierman, Baston, Long, and the Gopher linemen were stars for the Minnesota side. The weather was clear and not half as cold as one would have expected after yesterday. The field seemed rather slippery, which was good for the Gophers. A fast field would have been the same.

THE GAME IN DETAIL.

Capt. Bierman failed to guess right on the toss of the coin and Wisconsin chose the west goal. Capt. Buck caught the kickoff and came back considerable yards. The Badgers tried one fake kick and it was good for a six yard gain. Then there was a real kick, Wisconsin probably figuring it would do better by taking advantage of its superiority in distance kicking.

Long caught the ball on his twenty yard line and then the Gophers got busy with their justly famous attack. Capt. Buck was too much for them, however, and they were spilled thrice in succession. Long had to punt. The Badgers failed to get anywhere and Simpson kicked again. This punt was fumbled and Wisconsin got the pill on the Gopher twenty yard mark. Three plays failed and E. Simpson made a neat place kick from the twenty yard mark. Score: Wisconsin, 3; Minnesota, 0.

Badgers Set Back Fifteen Yards.

The Gophers kicked off again and the Cardinal repeated its former stunt. One fake kick was tried and then a real kick. This time there was no fumble and the Badgers were penalized fifteen yards, which brought the ball to the Gopher forty yard line in Minnesota's possession. The Gopher shift got busy and carried the ball on off tackle plunges to the Badger twenty yard line. There Capt. Buck stiffened again and on the fourth down, four or five to go, Long tried a triple or quadruple or something forward pass. A Wisconsin guy caught it and Simpson immediately punted out of danger. There was an exchange of punts right before the end of the first quarter, which wound up with the ball in Minnesota's possession on its own forty yard mark. Score: Wisconsin, 3; Minnesota, 0.

Second Period.

Minnesota had gained seven yards on three plays when the bleachers collapsed. There was a delay of ten minutes, and the hostilities were resumed. The Gophers made their distance on the next play. They made two more distances and were on the Badgers' twenty-five yard mark when Wisconsin held for downs. Simpson punted into Minnesota territory on the first play.

Two line plays were spilled, and then a beautiful forward pass, Wyman to Baston, was good for thirty yards. The pill was on the Badger thirty yard line. Wyman tried it again, and this time Mr. Taylor caught the ball and was chased out of bounds near the middle of the field. Simpson immediately punted, and Minnesota started all over again from its thirty-five yard line.

Right down to the Badger two yard line they paraded, and there a remarkable defense by Capt. Buck and his pals took the ball from them. But Simpson made a fierce and awful punt from behind his goal line, a punt that traveled only about ten yards on the fly, and then, hitting the ground, bounded back toward the Badger goal. A Wisconsin man fell on it, but of course it was Minnesota's ball.

With a first down and only about four yards to go, the Gophers were not to be denied, and on the second play Bierman went over for the touchdown. Baston kicked goal. A minute after the next kickoff time was called for the end of the half. Score: Minnesota, 7; Wisconsin, 3.

Third Quarter.

Simpson's kickoff in the second half went almost to the goal line. Johnson caught it and returned it twenty yards. The second play was a pass, Wyman to Baston. It took the ball to midfield. Minnesota tried another pass, and Smith, for Wisconsin, intercepted it. He was thrown on the Badgers' twenty-eight yard line.

Taylor tried to get away on a fake kick, and was thrown by Baston for a ten yard loss. Simpson punted, and Long made a fair catch on his own forty yard mark. On the second play Bierman got away around Wisconsin's left tackle for thirty yards.

Johnson went through for two yards, and Bierman made nine. This planted the celebrated oval on the seven yard line. Bierman's third attempt was good for the score. The touchdown was made at a corner of the field, and the punt out was a peach, Baston kicking an easy goal.

The Gopher attack was temporarily checked after the next kickoff, and Quist punted far into Badger territory. Taylor ran the ball back fifteen yards to his own forty yard mark. Wisconsin could not gain, and Simpson punted back to the Minnesota thirty yard line.

The Gophers tried a pass, which was caught by Taylor of Wisconsin. He bore it to midfield. The Badgers seemed to have a chance to do business so Juneau took E. Simpson out and substituted the famous Dow Byers. But a Wisconsin forward pass was nailed by a Gopher, and once more the Williams machine loosened up.

With Bierman doing most of the execution, the pellet was on Wisconsin's twenty yard line, and there it was when the third period ended. At this writing the score was 14 to 3.

Northmen Get Third Score.

Little Taylor was yanked out of the pastime, and E. Simpson, who had been supplanted by Byers at half, took the quarter back job. The Gophers were aided by a ten yard penalty. This and two plunges gave them a first down on the Wisconsin three yard line. Wisconsin held bravely thrice in succession, but on the fourth attempt Wyman went over. It was necessary again to punt out, and good position was secured, but Baston missed the goal.

Then it was that Eber Simpson redeemed himself for his foolish punt in the

PURPLE TAKES CELLAR BERTH BY 34-0 DEFEAT

Ohio State Shows Great Passing Game Against Weak Defense of Losers.

BY EVAN STONE.

Northwestern took a firm grip on the cellar championship yesterday by submitting to a 34 to 0 defeat by Ohio State. The Purple held the shade during the first half, which ended scoreless, but in the second half Coach Wilce's men opened up an aerial attack and put over a touchdown.

During the remainder of the third quarter and part of the fourth the Purple seemed paralyzed. Ohio tossed forward passes in rapid succession and the greater number of them were successful. The Purple backfield defended the attack in lackidaisical fashion, usually standing by while one of the visitors grabbed the ball and then tackling or tagging.

Ohio Shows Great Offense.

As the Purple's defense weakened Ohio's defense grew increasingly marvelous. The visitors nabbed passes up in the air with one hand or in their teeth while Murphy's men gaped. Ohio presented the best overhead attack yet seen on Northwestern field, but the frequent scoring was due more largely to the stupidication of the Purple team than to the invincibility of the formations.

On line play and end runs the teams battled on even terms. Northwestern did not try a pass during the first half and Ohio failed on the few it attempted. After the blow up in the second half the Purple tried several which failed because the receiver refused to hug the pigskin. The Northwestern offense became as dispirited as their defense. A crowd of 4,000 saw the game.

Between halves Northwestern students burned the Purple jinx, but the jinx must have had a resurrection. The home cheer leader announced Mr. Ring Lardner's Michigan-Wellesley score as final, 10 to 0 in favor of the latter, and there were loud cheers.

DETAIL OF GAME.

Capt. Boughton kicked off for Ohio State to Norman, who returned to his thirty-five yard line. The Purple failed to gain and Driscoll punted. Ohio could not gain. After two more exchanges of punts Ohio succeeded in making first down.

The Purple held and Yerges punted out of bounds on the Northwestern thirty-five yard line. Murphy's men made first down. The play for the remainder of the quarter fluctuated in the middle of the field, with the Purple having a shade.

Second Quarter.

Yerges punted to Underhill on his forty yard line. The Purple received a five yard penalty on the first play. Driscoll was forced to punt. Neither team could gain and punts followed in quick succession, Driscoll gaining on each exchange. Yerges took a punt on his fifteen yard line and dodged back fifteen yards. Ohio fumbled, but recovered.

Grosset went in for McCurdy and the Purple was set back five yards because McCurdy lingered on the side line. Hobt threw a forward pass to Winters for ten yards. Another pass was good for eight yards. Ohio fumbled and the Purple recovered on their thirty yard mark. On the first scrimmage Northwestern was penalized five yards.

Driscoll punted to Yerges on his fifty yard line. Ohio tossed a forward pass, but lost the ball on interference. Driscoll made a fifteen yard sprint, but was forced to punt after the Purple failed to gain. Ohio fumbled on its own thirty-five ward line and Northwestern recovered as the half ended.

Buckeyes Get Touchdown.

Steinbrenner kicked off to the Ohio fifteen yard line, and Winters returned thirty-five yards. Hobt tossed a forward pass to Yerges for first down. Hobt went off left tackle for five yards. Randolph smeared the next play for a loss. Winters tried a place kick from the forty-five yard line, but it went low and the Purple put the ball in scrimmage on the twenty yard line.

Driscoll punted to the middle of the field. Ohio made fifteen yards on a forward pass on the third attempt. Hobt gained eight yards and repeated for five more. Bolen on a fake run around right end turned and threw a forward pass to Peabody, who slid over for a touchdown. Yerges kicked goal. Score: Ohio State, 7; Northwestern, 0.

Ohio State Boosts Count.

Steinbrenner kicked off to Winters, who made a beautiful run back to the Purple forty-five yard line. Ohio opened up with forward passes and gained first down twice. Yerges threw a pass to Ginn on the Purple fifteen yard line and the latter went over for a touchdown, with Driscoll hanging on his legs. Yerges kicked goal. Score: Ohio State, 14; Northwestern, 0.

Ohio kicked to Driscoll on his five yard line and he returned twenty-five yards. The Purple failed to gain and Driscoll's punt was blocked, Ohio recovering on the Purple ten yard line. On the second play Sorenson went over for a touchdown. Yerges kicked goal. Score: Ohio State, 21; Northwestern, 0.

Steinbrenner kicked to Yerges, who was stopped on his thirty yard line. Ohio punted and the Purple returned. Ohio went to the Northwestern thirty yard line by the aerial route. Another pass gained ten yards. Ohio was penalized five yards for offside play. Ohio held the ball on the Purple twelve yard line at the end of the quarter.

Fourth Period.

Ohio gained three yards on a forward pass. Northwestern was penalized half the distance to the goal line and Arries was put out of the game. Sorenson went over for another touchdown on the second down. Yerges missed goal. Score: Ohio, 27; Northwestern, 0.

Ohio returned the kickoff to its thirty yard line. The Purple stopped the rout for a few minutes until Hobt grabbed a pass on the home team's ten yard line. Northwestern stopped Ohio and put the ball in scrimmage on its twenty yard line. Driscoll ran twenty yards. A forward pass was nabbed by Ohio. A series of forward passes carried the ball to the Purple twenty yard line. Bolen caught a pass behind the goal line for the fourth marker. Yerges kicked goal. Score: Ohio State, 34; Northwestern, 0.

Rose returned Ohio's kickoff ten yards. Hobt grabbed a Purple pass and when tackled attempted to hit a Purple player. Grosset came to the rescue of his teammate and both were sent to the side lines. The game ended with Ohio holding the ball on its twenty yard mark.

SYRACUSE-DARTMOUTH IN TIE

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 20.—In a quagmire of mud Syracuse and Dartmouth battled to a scoreless tie this afternoon. Until the last three minutes of play Syracuse outplayed the Greens.

Harvard Vanquishes Yale by Overwhelming Score, 41-0

Capt. Mahan Ends Career by Scoring 29 Points.

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Administering one of the most overwhelming defeats in the history of the Harvard-Yale classics, the Crimson vanquished the Blue 41 to 0 this afternoon in the Harvard stadium.

Capt. Eddie Mahan wound up his football in a blaze of glory, playing by far the greatest game of his long and spectacular career. Of the forty-one points tallied by Harvard Mahan scored twenty-nine.

Four of the six touchdowns were made by Mahan, and the Harvard leader kicked five goals.

It was evident early in the first period that Yale was outclassed by the wearers of the Crimson, but this fact became more and more evident as the game progressed. Harvard displayed better football knowledge and proved superior to the Blue in every department of the game.

Straight Football at Start.

Until the third period neither team attempted anything but straight football. But from that point until the close of the battle both elevens pulled off a number of forward passes.

Harvard got the "break" when in the opening period Van Nostrand fumbled one of Mahan's punts and Dick Harte scooped up the ball and raced across for the first tally of the game. Harte's recovery put much fight into Harvard, but Yale continued to battle to the best of its ability.

Mal Scovil was the star of the defeated Yale eleven. He proved a wonderful man both on the offense and defense. "Cupid" Black, the giant Yale guard, was a tower of strength in the line of Blue, opening up hole after hole through which the Yale backs made many yards.

Scovil's work was somewhat marred by his tendency to rough playing. He was not the only Yale player guilty of slugging, for during the first period many attempts were made to "get" Capt. Mahan and Gilman, the mainstay of the Crimson line.

Two Chicagoans Earn H's."

Ralph Horween and George McKinlock, two Chicago boys, were sent into the game and received the much coveted "H."

Between halves a score of undergraduates crowded their way through the 50,000 spectators who were massed in the stadium and collected relief funds for the war sufferers. While this was going on the rooters of both universities shattered the air with songs and cheers. Two movie operators, who were busy, found a suitable subject to film when a 6 year old boy, dressed entirely in Crimson, ran aimlessly onto the gridiron.

First Period.

Harvard won the toss and chose the west goal, having the wind in its favor. An exchange of punts followed the kickoff. Yale reached Harvard's twenty yard line and was advanced fifteen yards further through a penalty against the Crimson for holding. Mahan punted from behind his goal post to midfield.

Capt. Wilson of Yale rushed the ball from a delayed pass formation thirty-three yards to Harvard's twenty-five yard line. On the next play Bingham fumbled and Soucy recovered for Havard. Mahan immediately kicked to Yale's twenty-eight yard line, where Van Nostrand fumbled. Harte, the speedy Harvard right end, picked up the ball and scored without opposition. Mahan failed to kick the goal.

Harvard scored again in this period on straight rushing, King starting the fireworks from midfield by making seventeen yards in three rushes. Mahan added twelve more and brought the ball to Yale's twenty-five yard line. Yale braced for two downs, but King raced around Allen's end to the Blue's ten yard mark. A dash through the center gave Mahan another four yards, and on the next play he pushed through Way's side of the line for a touchdown. This time he kicked the goal. The period ended shortly afterward, the score being: Harvard, 13; Yale, 0.

Second Period.

Boles had run the ball back to midfield at the close of the first chapter, and here Harvard started another series of sensational smashes toward the Blue's goal post, with persistent Dick King and Capt. Eddy gaining in large chunks. The ball was finally landed on Eli's seven yard mark. One rush failed, then the stalwart Harvard leader corkscrewed his way through the heart of the Yale line for another touchdown. Mahan easily kicked the goal.

Yale here sent in a couple of new backs in Scovil and Chatfield-Taylor. Hollwein for Harvard relieved Boles. Chatfield-Taylor punted to Harvard's thirty yard line, where the ball was fumbled, but King of Harvard recovered. The officials sent the ball back and penalized Harvard. Dick King shortly afterwards bounced into the limelight. On the extreme end of the line, at Harvard's forty yard mark, he raced around Higginbotham, barely missing the outside limits, then turned into the middle of the field, covering sixty yards before he landed behind the Yale goal line, where he was violently thrown by Chatfield-Taylor. This was the Crimson's fourth touchdown. Mahan kicked goal, making the score: Harvard, 27; Yale, 0.

In the remainder of the first half the play developed largely into an exchange of punts. Hollwein, a Chicago boy, who had taken Boles' place, did some fine defensive work toward the end of the period.

Third Period.

Capt. Mahan kicked off to Yale's five yard line, Wilson returning the ball twenty yards. Savage went into the Yale backfield. An exchange of kicks followed and it was Harvard's ball on the twenty-five yard line. Another exchange of kicks gave Yale the ball on its thirty-five yard line. Neither Scovil nor Savage could make any headway, the former being thrown for a loss, which gave Harvard the ball on Yale's thirty-five yard line. King got five yards on a lateral pass and brought the ball to Yale's twenty-five yard line. A forward pass, Watson to Soucy, added ten yards, and King picked up several more at center, putting the ball on Yale's two yard line. Mahan was shoved through right tackle for Harvard's fifth touchdown. He then kicked his fourth goal, making the score Harvard 34, Yale 0.

Wilson rushed the kickoff back to Yale's thirty-five yard line. A short pass, Schofield to Savage, netted four yards. Savage then punted to Harvard's seven yard line. Mahan from behind his goal line punted to Harvard's forty-three yard line. Yale tried a forward pass, Waite to Wilson, the latter crossing Harvard's goal line. There was holding, however, and the ball was returned to its original position. Another Yale pass was intercepted by Boles of Harvard on the Crimson's thirty yard line. Neither team could gain consistently by rushing. In the last minute of the period Yale recovered a fumble on its thirty-five yard line.

Fourth Period.

McKinlock, the Forest Hills, Ill., boy, replaced Boles for Harvard. Three successive forward passes by Yale carried the ball to Harvard's seventeen yard line. Scovil got three more through the line. On the next play Harvard was penalized five yards for offside play. Yale was penalized a like number of yards for the same offense on the next play. A forward pass was incompleted, and Neville replaced Waite in the Yale lineup. He failed on a field goal from the twenty yard line.

Yale was penalized for using hands roughly on the kickoff and Harvard was given fifteen yards as a balm, the ball being placed on the thirty yard line. Although Yale fumbled Mahan's kickoff on its thirteen yard line, Neville recovered. Two rushes and a fifteen yard penalty brought the ball to Yale's thirty-eight yard line. Wilson heaved a long forward pass to Ames, who, although he jumped, failed to hold the ball. It dropped into the arms of Rollins, the Harvard sub back, who rushed the ball to Yale's thirty yard line. A beautiful forward pass, Robinson to Soucy, gained fifteen yards. A delayed pass, with Robinson carrying the ball, landed Harvard on Yale's eight yard line. McKinlock shot through center to Yale's five yard line and added two more through the same hole. Mahan then pulled off his fourth touchdown of the game and sent his fifth goal across the bar. Score: Harvard, 41; Yale, 0.

Yale in this period made its third first down of the game when Ames flashed out a twenty-four yard run to midfield. The period and the game ended here, Harvard, 41; Yale, 0.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Wabash college won the state conference championship at Washington park today, defeating De Pauw, 34 to 0. The victory gives the "Little Giants" a clean slate, all games being won except that with Purdue, which went to a 7 to 7 tie. Wabash completely outplayed the Methodists and its goal line was in danger only in the last minute of play.

PURDUE PASSES WORK DOWNFALL OF INDIANA, 7-0

Boilermakers in Danger Often, but Hoosiers Lack Punch on Muddy Field.

Bloomington, Ind., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—A lone touchdown by Purdue defeated Indiana, 7 to 0, in the last game that will ever be played on Jordan field. Purdue used a number of forward passes in the second quarter to carry the ball to Indiana's three yard line and Pultz carried it over.

Indiana showed a fine spurt in the first quarter, when Capt. Whitaker's men sifted through the Boilermaker line and around the ends with little difficulty. Indiana had the ball on the six yard line when the upstate line held, and the pigskin went over. Indiana had possession of the ball most of the time and made good gains until within striking distance of the goal, when the Purdue crew would stop the rushes. Indiana tried forward passes many times, but only twice were they good for gains.

Wet Field Hampers Hoosiers.

The muddy field seemed to favor the visitors, as they managed to keep their feet well, while Child's men were unable to stand up even after a good start. Indiana was expected to win, as nearly all the dope favored the local eleven. Both sides depended chiefly on straight football, and only two end runs during the contest netted substantial gains.

Full Back McIntosh, who scored on Chicago this year, thrilled the Indiana bleachers by getting off for a thirty-five yard run around right end. Whitaker and Erhart, the Hoosier back field stars, also made good gains. Capt. Blocker and Pultz played great defensive games for Purdue, and the former had to be carried from the field in the last quarter after he had been knocked unconscious.

Erhart Fails on Kicks.

Scott and Pultz shared honors in the kicking department, each punting from thirty-five to sixty yards. Erhart tried two field goals for Indiana, but each failed.

The game was witnessed by 10,000 persons and was the last that will ever be staged on historic Jordan field. All coming contests here will be fought on a much larger gridiron that will be near the home of the new $175,000 gymnasium.

CULVER TOO GOOD FOR LAKE FOREST

Culver, Ind., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Culver Military academy took a terrific game from Lake Forest academy today, 32 to 21. With the cadets far in the lead Lake Forest by daring passes and brilliant rushes scored two touchdowns in the last quarter. Meakens of Culver made a seventy yard run for a score by taking one of the visitors' passes. Brown's running, tackling, and generalship won for Culver. The passing of Bergen, Jaicks, and Eissler for Lake Forest was brilliant. Lineup:

CAPTAIN OF PREP ELEVEN KILLED IN FOOTBALL GAME.

Buckhannon, W. Va., Nov. 20.—William Parker, 20 years old, captain of the Wheeling High school football team was fatally injured in a game here today. Parker's head was hurt in the first play, but he remained in the game until near the close of the first half. He died an hour later from rhemmorhage of the brain.

ILLINOIS COLLEGE GETS 111.

Jacksonville, Ill., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Illinois college closed its football schedule today be defeating Carthage college, 111 to 0. Illinois went through the season undefeated and Coach Harman tonight claims state honors among minor colleges in view of the fact Monmouth and Lombard played a tie on Friday and Illinois defeated Lombard 14 to 7. Illinois' unbroken string of victories includes Millikin, Wesleyan, Normal, Lincoln, Shurtliff, Lombard, and Carthage.

WILLIAM JEWELL WINS, 16-6.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 20.—William Jewell proved the stronger football team here today and defeated Drury college, 16 to 6. Only in the last period did Drury have a chance, not making first down up to that time. In this quarter Drury recovered Mayberry's fumble in midfield. Two forward passes and a short gain through the line placed the ball on the ten yard line and Capt. Ruffin scored the losers' only touchdown with a tackle swing.

ILLINI DOWN MAROONS IN FINAL COMBAT, 10-0

Touchdown by Halstrom and Goal by Macomber in First Period.

ZUPPKES GET JUMP.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

With a burst of speed right at the start of the game Illinois scored 10 points on Chicago in the final game of the year at Stagg field yesterday and made those 10 points win in a brilliant battle that gave the Illini equal claim with Minnesota on the conference championship. After that early spurt the combat resolved itself into an even fight, and the final count was: Illinois, 10; Chicago, 0.

It was a terrific struggle, with the exception of the first ten minutes of play, before the Maroons got their bearings. As soon as they came to life they fought gamely and in desperation for three full quarters, but theirs was mostly a fight on defense.

Maroons Hold on Yard Line.

The Midwayites never really threatened the Illinois goal, but they did stop further progress of Bob Zuppke's proud warriors and deserved great credit. Three times they rallied in tight places and stopped the state school men when the latter seemed sure to score. Once when Chicago held for downs and the mass of men had been torn apart it was found the ball was less than one yard from the Maroon goal line.

Contrary to expectations, it was more of a plunging game than one of open field running. Pogue, Clark, and Russell, all stars in the open field, seldom got loose and never for a run of sensational character. Russell never seemed to have much help from his mates. Time after time he tried, but generally found three or four stalwart Illinois men to hurl him to earth.

Pershing Plays Star Game.

Frank Pershing, of whom little was expected, was really the star of the Maroon eleven. His runs around the end and his darting plays off tackle did most of the gaining for the Midway school, but he couldn't fight the battle alone. In the middle of the third quarter he was removed, apparently played out, and Cahn took his place.

The Illini was just a bit of a disappointment to their admirers, who had looked for a greater score against Stagg's men than had been made by Minnesota. After getting their ten points they seemed to quit hustling, as if confident of the victory.

The Illinois squad appeared on the field fifteen minutes before the start of play and ran off plays for ten minutes before the Maroons finally showed.

Pass Helps Zuppke's Men.

It was with the aid of a successful pass that Zuppke's men got within striking distance of Chicago's goal in the fourth quarter, and for a time there was a display of the old fire and spirit of the first minutes, but when Chicago held for downs two feet from its goal there was no fight left on the Illinois side.

On the other hand, the Maroons rallied and fought in desperation, hoping to score. They tried one forward pass after another, but could do no good, and as a final effort Capt. Russell attempted an old time end run. He was thrown for a loss just before the final whistle blew.

In the second quarter the visitors were held even, and after the first half ended they came back with renewed spirit, but it played out again before the game ended. Forward passing featured the offensive work of both sides, but the passes were failures much more than half of the time.

Vacant Spots on Both Sides.

From the looks of the crowd one would judge the ticket scalpers had been caught with seats on their hands. When the game began there were vacant spots in both sides, indicating that valuable tickets had never been turned in at the gate. The standing room at each end of the field was almost packed to the limit, but it is doubtful if there were more than 22,000 persons all told. The cold weather undoubtedly kept a lot of rooters of the lesser enthusiastic type at home.

The field, contrary to expectations, was in fine condition. It was not fast, but the bed of hay had kept it dry enough so there was firm footing for the speedy runners. Perhaps the rooting was the grandest ever heard on Stagg field. There were 4,500 Illinois students and alumni assembled in the east stand, and nowhere do they know how to deliver college yells better than at Illinois.

The Maroon band paraded first and was followed by the Illini musicians, seventy-five in number, who gave a regular military show.

First Period.

Chicago won the toss and chose to defend the south goal with a slight wind in its favor. Macomber kicked off over the Maroon goal, and the ball was brought out to the twenty yard line for scrimmage. Pershing in an off tackle play failed to gain, and Russell punted at once to Clark, who was downed on Illinois' thirty-five yard line.

Two plays made seven yards on the Maroon right side and then Halstrom tore through for ten yards. Clark got around left end for seven yards and then Halstrom went through center for another seven, taking the ball to Chicago's twenty yard line.

From there Halstrom was handed the ball again and hit the right side of the Maroon line, shaking off three or four tacklers, but keeping on the move until he got the ball over the goal line at the southeast corner of the field. Macomber punted out to Clark and then Bart kicked goal. Score: Illinois, 7; Chicago, 0.

Pershing Returns Thirty Yards.

Macomber kicked off to Pershing, who made a great run of thirty yards to Chicago's thirty-five yard line. On the first play Russell got seven yards around right end. Flood made it first down on a plunge through center. Illinois was penalized five yards for offside play and it was first down on Illinois' forty-six yard line. Agar fumbled at this point and the ball went over.

Illinois tried a long forward pass which was barely missed by Brenneman. Another forward pass, Clark to Macomber, netted twenty yards, and it was first down on Chicago's thirty-six yard line. Illinois tried a double pass, but Jackson broke it up for a loss of five yards. Another double pass and forward pass followed for a gain of fifteen yards, and it was first down on Chicago's twenty-five yard line. Pogue made eleven yards around left end. He added five around the other side to Chicago's ten yard line.

Place Kick by Macomber.

The Maroons braced here, and on the third down Illinois was penalized fifteen yards, probably for rough play. Pogue went over the left side for twenty yards, but it was fourth down. Macomber then made a pretty place kick from the twenty-five yard line. Score: Illinois, 10; Chicago, 0.

Macomber kicked off to Agar, who returned the ball to Chicago's twenty-eight yard line. Two plays lost a yard for Chicago and Russell punted to Macomber, who was downed on Illinois' thirty-eight yard line. Halstrom made three yards through center, but Illinois was penalized fifteen yards for holding. On two plays Macomber and Halstrom gained only a yard and Macomber punted fifty-five yards to Pershing, who was downed on Chicago's thirty-eight yard line.

Russell made six yards, but Chicago was penalized five yards for offside play. Chicago made a short forward pass, but it gained only five yards. A long forward pass, Russell to Pershing, netted thirty-five yards, and it was first down on Illinois' thirty yard line. After one play, which failed to gain, time was called for the first quarter. Score: Illinois, 10; Chicago, 0.

Second Quarter.

Russell made five yards around end on the first play. Then a forward pass was tried, but it failed. With fourth down and four yards to gain, Russell tried a forward pass, which was intercepted by Halstrom, and it was Illinois' ball on its own twenty-two yard line. On the first down Macomber punted fifty-five yards to Russell, who was downed on Chicago's forty-one yard line.

Petty was injured and Applegran replaced him. Russell punted and Illinois took the ball on its sixteen yard line. Macomber punted on the first down to Russell, who was thrown on Chicago's forty-two yard line. Two plays failed to gain and a forward, Russell to Townley, made it first down in the middle of the field. Another forward pass of the same kind made five yards. Illinois braced here, and three plays failed to gain a yard, after which Russell punted to Clark, who was downed on Illinois twelve yard line.

Clark's Sweater Torn.

Clark was tackled so fiercely that his sweater was torn into shreds, and time had to be taken out while a new one was put on. Clark tried a run around right end, but gained only a yard, and Macomber punted sixty yards to Russell, who was downed in midfield. Pershing made five yards, but Chicago was penalized five yards for off side. Three plays made only a yard and a forward pass, Russell to Whiting, gained fifteen yards to Illinois' forty yard line.

Pershing made five yards through left tackle and Russell went ten more around right end, and it was first down on Illinois' twenty-five yard line. Chicago failed to gain on two plays, then a forward pass, Russell to Pershing, took the ball to Illinois' eighteen yard line, and it was fourth down with two yards to gain. Chicago tried to make the distance on a double pass, but failed, and it was Illinois' ball on its own twenty-eight yard line.

Pogue Makes Eight Yards.

Pogue made five yards and then added three more around right end. Halstrom made it first down on a smash through the middle. Illinois tried two forward passes, the second of which was intercepted by Whiting, and the ball went to Chicago in the center of the field.

Agar got three yards, then Russell tried a forward pass, which was intercepted, and the ball went to Illinois on its own thirty-five yard line. Jackson threw Clark for a loss of five yards. Twice more in succession Illinois was thrown for a loss, when time was called for the first half. Score: Illinois, 10; Chicago, 0.

Third Quarter.

Macomber kicked off to Pershing, who fumbled the ball on his own five yard line, but picked it up and ran forty-five yards to the middle of the field before being downed. On the first play Illinois was penalized five yards for off side. Pershing failed to gain around left end and Flood hit the center for no gain. Russell made a short forward pass to Breloe for a gain of fifteen yards to Illinois' thirty-two yard line. Agar made seven yards off right tackle. Flood added two feet through center, and it was fourth down with a foot to gain. Agar made five yards off right tackle and it was first down on Illinois' sixteen yard line.

Agar failed on the same play, and Pershing tried a run around left end, but lost ten yards. Russell tried a forward pass, which failed, and it was fourth down on the twenty-five yard line. On a fake forward pass formation Flood tried to go through center, but made only a yard, and Illinois took the ball on its twenty-four yard line.

Rip Up Maroon Game.

Pogue and Halstrom made eleven yards on three plays. On a split play Pogue darted through the Chicago line and gained twenty yards to Chicago's forty-three yard line. Halstrom made six yards through right tackle. Pogue added six more, and it was first down on Chicago's thirty yard line. Schafer replaced Flood. Pogue fumbled and kicked the ball towards the side line and Pershing recovered it and was downed on Chicago's thirty-three yard line.

Russell was thrown for a ten yard loss. Agar got ten yards around right end, but the ball was brought back and Chicago was penalized five yards for off side. Russell punted forty yards to Macomber, who was downed in the center of the field. Foster replaced Whiting.

Macomber Makes 20 Yards.

Macomber went around left right end for twenty yards to Chicago's thirty yard line. On a triple pass, Clark to Macomber to Pogue, the latter got around right end for a twelve yard gain to Chicago's fifteen yard line. Clark made a yard through the middle and Pogue added four off left tackle. Pogue added only one yard on a split play, and with it fourth down and four yards Macomber tried a place kick from the seventeen yard line. The ball passed a foot under the goal post and Chicago brought it out to the twenty yard line for scrimmage.

Russell and Agar lost two yards on two plays and Russell punted. The ball was almost blocked when an Illinois man touched it in the air and a Chicago man recovered it on its own thirty-seven yard line. Pershing and Agar made thirteen yards on two plays and the ball was on Illinois' forty-five yard line. Pershing got seven yards around left end, when time was called for the end of the third quarter. Score: Illinois, 10; Chicago, 0.

Fourth Quarter.

On the first play Pershing made four yards and it was first down on Illinois' thirty-five yard line. Russell got five yards, but the ball was brought back and Chicago was penalized five yards for off-side. Russell tried three forward passes, two of which failed, while the latter gained five yards, and it was fourth down with ten yards to gain. Instead of punting Russell tried an end run, but seeing he was headed off he made a forward pass, which failed, and Illinois took the ball on its own thirty-five yard line.

On three plays Illinois failed to gain an inch and Macomber punted out of bounds on Chicago's twenty-eight yard line. Cahn replaced Pershing. Cahn failed to gain on two attempts and Russell tried a forward pass, which failed. Russell punted to Macomber, who made a fair catch in the middle of the field. On two plays Illinois made one yard and Macomber on a punt formation ran eight yards.

Double Pass Nets Twenty.

Halstrom made it first down. Halstrom made two yards and then a double pass to Pogue added twenty yards, putting the balloon on Chicago's twenty yard line. Halstrom and Macomber made six yards and Clark made it first down on Chicago's six yard line. Halstrom got four yards off left tackle. Clark fumbled on the next play, but recovered the ball on Chicago's four yard line. Pogue made only one yard and it was fourth down on Chicago's three yard line. Macomber tried the left side of the line, but advanced only two yards, and Chicago took the ball on its one yard line.

From behind the goal posts Russell punted to Clark, who was downed on Chicago's forty-two yard line. Illinois failed to gain on two line plays and Clark tried a long forward pass, which was missed by only inches. Macomber then punted straight up in the air and the ball went to Chicago on its own forty yard line.

Twelve Yard Gain by Cahn.

A forward pass, Russell to Cahn, made twelve yards. Russell tried four forward passes in a row, but failed to make ten yards, and Illinois took the ball on its own forty-five yard line.

A forward pass to Macomber made fifteen yards, but the next one was intercepted and the ball went to Chicago on its own thirty-five yard line. Russell just had time to try one end run, which failed, when time was called.

LAKE FOREST LOSES, 7 TO 6, TO CARROLL COLLEGE TEAM.

Carroll college defeated Lake Forest college at Lake Forest by the much discussed point of the goal from touchdown. The victors were outplayed after the first five minutes but the deep sea condition of the field made consistent football impossible. Fumbles ruined many good openings for Lake Forest, although the ball was almost continually in Carroll territory. Both sides missed place kicks and the soggy condition of the ball prevented open play.

Keller scored Carroll's touchdown five minutes after the game started, following two forward passes. Gray scored for Lake Forest in the second quarter. Gray played a sensational game, both offensively and defensively, and was easily the star of the game. Lineup:

FORDHAM SCALPS CARLISLE.

New York, Nov. 20.—Fordham university defeated Carlisle Indian school today, 14 to 10. Fordham scored in the first period, after a fumble, on Dunn's 85 yard run for a touchdown, Yule kicking the goal. In the second period Calac of the visitors kicked a field goal from the twenty-five yard line. Yule skirted the right end in the third period for a forty yard dash to a touchdown and also kicked goal. In the same period Calac was pushed over the line in a scrimmage and also kicked goal.

DAHLEN HAS CHANGED UNIFORMS INVOLUNTARILY MORE OFTEN THAN ALL THE REST

BY I. E. SANBORN.

WE were talking about the rolling stones that gather no moss in baseball. A lot of them were mentioned; players who had performed in many uniforms and switched teams often, either voluntarily or involuntarily, without getting much of anywhere. Gradually the rolling stones were separated into two classes; one including the players who have been the playthings of Fate, personified by managers or club owners, and the other including players who have tried to control their own destinies in spite of club owners.

Finally the two most prominent examples of these two classes were agreed to be Bill Dahlen and Hal Chase, both of whom at different times have worn Chicago uniforms in different leagues.

Dahlen was picked as the most prominent player who has changed uniforms oftenest involuntarily, and Chase as the most conspicuous player who has changed allegiance oftenest voluntarily. There are players who have been traded more frequently than Dahlen, but few if any of them ever possessed Dahlen's ability. The player of his ability usually is retained indefinitely by the club owner who discovers him or at least plays for not more than two clubs during his major league career. There may be players who have been in and out of organized baseball oftener than Chase, but none of them belonged in his class as a diamond performer.

Dahlen broke into the major class when there was only one major league, coming to the Chicago Nationals from the New York State league in 1890. He was one of Cap Anson's discoveries and played under the veteran leader until Cap's retirement in favor of Tom Burns at the end of the season of 1897. Burns retained Dahlen at short only one year, then traded him before the season of 1899 to Brooklyn, getting Gene Demontreville in exchange. Incidentally Dahlen outlasted Demontreville nearly a decade.

In Brooklyn Dahlen played under the management of Ned Hanlon and was a member of the team that won the National league pennants of 1899 and 1900 before there was any modern world's series to recompense the champion teams.

Dahlen tired of Brooklyn, or Brooklyn tired of him shortly afterward, and in 1904 he was traded to the New York Giants for Charley Babb and Jack Cronin. Again Dahlen outlasted the men for whom he was swapped. This trade brought Dahlen under the management of John McGraw and put him on a team which won two more National league pennants—1904 and 1905. In the latter year the Giants won the world's pennant from the Philadelphia Athletics, putting Dahlen on the roll of honor as a world's champion. He did not contribute much in the batting way to the acquisition of the big flag, for he failed to make a base hit in the post-season combat. That fact has been accentuated in an incident that illustrates Dahlen's taciturn sense of humor.

The brand of balls used in the American league in 1905 was said to be different from the pills used by the National league, although the difference never was fully reasoned out. However, considerable discussion was indulged in at the time. It was agreed to use American league balls on the Athletic's grounds and National league balls at the Polo grounds. After four games had been played one of the Giants asked Dahlen on the way to the club house, "What do you think of those American league balls, Bill?"

McGraw did not retain Dahlen long, but included him in what then was heralded as the biggest wholesale dicker that had occurred, when New York gave Dahlen, McGann, Bowerman, and Ferguson to the Boston Nationals for Tenney, Bridwell, and Needham. Those were the days when McGraw was trying to lick the Cubs for the old league's pennant, and the trade did not enable him to do so. Neither did it enhance the playing strength of the Boston team to any great extent. While in Boston Dahlen played under the management of Joe Kelley and later of Frank Bowerman, making him one of the most promiscuously managed players in the game.

Brooklyn began angling for Dahlen in the spring of 1909 with the purpose of making him manager, but it was not until 1910 that Ebbets succeeded in landing the rolling stone to pilot the Dodgers. Dahlen soon found out that the team manager was merely a figurehead hired to shoulder the blame if the team proved a bloomer and to let the club owner claim the credit if success crowned their efforts. After shouldering the blame for a while Dahlen gave way to Wilbert Robinson and was converted into an ivory hunter.

Hal Chase belonged to a different brand of rolling stones. Unlike Dahlen, he always was eager to aid fate in shaping his destiny, and twice jumped the traces in an effort to better himself financially without gathering any particularly heavy coat of moss. Chase has played for fewer teams and under fewer managers than Dahlen, but he has held the managerial reins himself, and if he gets back into organized baseball this time he may equal Dahlen's itinerant record.

The dazzling left handed first baseman came into the big league from California and started shining in New York in 1905 under the management of Clark Griffith, then pilot of the Yankees. In passing, it may be added that Comiskey missed grabbing Chase out of the bushes by only a few days.

The master of the White Sox had the first tip on Chase. It was given to me by the late Frank Selee, then manager of the Cubs, who had seen Chase out on the coast when the Cubs trained there. But Selee could not use Chase as he had Chance for first base and no left hander can play any other infield position successfully. So I was permitted to pass the tip along to Comiskey, but the Old Roman did not think highly enough of my dope to get busy immediately and when he finally did go after Chase he learned that Griffith had acquired him.

Chase chafed under the discipline enforced by the American league and after establishing himself as a star player longed for his native state so earnestly that he listened to the temptations of the promoters of an outlaw organization called the "California State league" and joined their ill fated ship for a spell. When the smash up came Chase was granted reinstatement on promise of future loyalty and returned to the New York Americans, of which he was made manager to succeed George Stallings, now of the Boston Braves.

Like Dahlen, Chase proved inadequately equipped to manage a baseball team and was supplanted by Wolverton in 1913. In the middle of that season Chase came to the White Sox in exchange for Zeider and Borton. He remained under Callahan until midseason of 1914, then jumped overnight to the Buffalo club of the Federal league. It is a coincidence that Zeider and Borton also jumped.

ZUPPKE TO LOSE 2 STAR PLAYERS OF 'GRID' SQUAD

Urbana, Ill., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Bob Zuppke's third year of coaching at Illinois closed with the Illinois-Chicago battle on Stagg field, which was the valedictory for a notable coterie of athletes. The little coach, when he maps out his 1916 campaign, must reckon without the services of the twin whirlwinds, Potsy Clark and Harold Pogue, whose fame will endure long in Illini annals, as well as "Cap" Squier, the veteran end; Capt. Jack Watson, center; Breneman, right end, and Anderson, sub half back.

Potsy Clark has played only two years, but he had the ill fortune to compete for Williams and Vashti college one year, this counting as a year of competition. Clark will go down in local history as the greatest Illinois quarter back of all time. Zuppke says that with the exception of Barrett, perhaps, Clark is the greatest all round player he has ever coached.

Pogue's Career Sensational.

Pogue had a sensational career. He was dropped off his freshman squad because he didn't look like a football player But when he was a sophomore he made good and scored innumerable touchdowns, even with a weak team. Then came the championship team of 1914, with Pogue and Clark alternating in long runs through every team they encountered. Both Clark and Pogue will be seen in athletics, however, as Potsy is a baseball player and Pogue one of the best broad jumpers in the Big Nine.

Bart Macomber of Chicago is the probable selection for the 1916 leadership. Macomber and Ross Petty, left tackle, are the only Illini who have played for two years. Macomber is regarded as the logical choice for captain. The old time Oak Park star is one of the most valuable men on the team. He is a fair ground gainer, a marvelous defensive player, and an adept at interfering. On top of all this, he is a good punter and can place or drop kick a goal in a pinch.

Select New Leader Tomorrow.

The selection of the Illini leader will be made Monday night at the annual Kaufman-Hatch football dinner, where Bob Zuppke is expected to outline the prospects and hopes of the Illini for next season. The board of athletic control will award the letters Monday.

Harmony prevails in the Illini football camp, where it is held that had it not been for injuries to his stars Zuppke could have invaded Stagg field with victories over Ohio and Minnesota to his credit, instead of deadlocks. As the little coach is working under a contract which has four more years to run, there is no chance that any one will try to steal him.

"Zupp" will take a rest before assuming charge of the freshman basketball squad. In the spring he will hold the usual practice. Next year's footballers will be urged to participate in wrestling, swimming, basketball, or some other sport in order to keep in condition the ear round.

While football vanishes, basketball takes the center of the Illini athletic stage. Last season Ralph Jones turned out a championship quintet, but he has lost all his stars except the famous Woods twins from Evanston and Alward, who was practically a regular, although displaced when Williford rounded into form.

SHATTUCK CADETS WINNERS

Shattuck Military school defeated St. John's Military academy today, 15 to 7. The game was clean and fast and was marked by the brilliant forward passing of Shattuck and the work of Anspach, St. John's quarter back. With the score 9 to 7 in the last period, Bundy of Shattuck intercepted a forward pass and ran forty yards for a touchdown, giving his team a commanding lead. Anspach, Howard, and Campbell were the stars for St John's and Harlan did excellent work for Shattuck.

FRANKLIN USES GALLON OF OIL FOR 1,135 MILES

BY REED L. PARKER.

What is believed to be the first official record of its kind was established by a Franklin car when it finished a 1,135 mile run from New York to Chicago at the local dealers, 1450 Michigan avenue, this morning at 5 o'clock on a gallon of oil. An attempt to average twenty miles an hour was frustrated by heavy rains and snow encountered on the trip from Cleveland. The car was delayed sixteen hours by the elements and the illness of L. Springer of Chicago, who drove the car from Kendallville here.

Six drivers handled the car in relays. Observers from the Automobile Club of America, riding twelve hours at a shift, watched every move of the pilots. Ferdinand Jehle rode with Springer into Chicago. Herbert Smith relieved him from time to time.

Motor Runs Perfectly.

Prior to leaving New York the car, which was a sedan, was inspected by officials of the A. C. A., who, after certifying it was stock in every particular measured the oil. They repeated the performances after the car checked in and found that a little less than a gallon was used for the entire trip. The car was plastered with mud when it arrived, but the motor was purring just as perfectly as Franklin motors usually do and the interior of the closed body looked as if it had been driven from Washington park to the loop.

The long and relatively fast trip of the sedan is another indication that touring is just coming into its own, according to Jehle. He advised those who contemplate an immediate trip east to delay their departure until the weather settles, however, as road conditions are generally poor.

Report of Fire Exaggerated.

A letter was received by THE TRIBUNE from the Packard company yesterday, which declared that newspaper reports of a fire at the plant in Detroit were greatly exaggerated and that production would go on as usual.

New York, Nov. 20.—President Wilson, who already has reserved boxes on the Navy side of the grand stand for the Army-Navy game on Saturday, is expected to make reservations on the Army side also. Conversation after the deal:

[Expurgated.]

East—A heart! A heart! You bid a heart and we had game and rubber at no trump!

West—I won't make it no trump with one little diamond in my hand. If I did this man (north) would be sure to run off about nine diamonds.

East—I had the ace and king of diamonds.

West—O, yes! Of course, I can see through the backs of the cards! You expect me to do that before I bid.

East—You only had four trumps. A fine chance you stood to win anything with four trumps!

West—I know I only had four trumps, but I had five side cards and a singleton diamond. If you'd only think a little deeper about this game you wouldn't talk so foolish.

West had greater lung power and easily won a verbal victory.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

Buxton, Ia.—[To the Editor.]—In scoring the bonus of 250 for the rubber my understanding is, that when either pair have won two out of three games, the total score above and below the line is added and the pair having the larger total scores the 250. Am I right? L. M. D.

Answer—You are wrong. The bonus of 250 always goes to the pair who win two games.

South Bend, Ind.—[To the Editor.]—We meet here Friday and want to organize a whist club. Will you please inform us how to proceed? We want to be affiliated with national organization and would thank you to send us new rules if you have them. Our organization will be composed of membership from the different clubs of South Bend. W. B. JR.

Ans.—Address American Whist league, care H. T. Fry, Chicago Whist club, 143 North Dearborn street, Chicago.

Coshocton O.—[To the Editor.]—Hearts trump (duplicate whist). East dealt south to lead, holding:

Hearts—Q, 8.
Spades—J, 10, 9, 6, 3.
Diamonds—A, Q, 10, 2.
Clubs—A, 7.

Of course the conventional lead would be spade 6, but would you say that opening with the queen of trumps was wild, the supposition being that partner must have strength in either clubs or trump suit if he has anything and if either, the strengthening trump could not hurt him. W. N. D.

Answer—The spade opening is better, although the trump lead should not do much harm. Queen and one is a poor suit to lead.

second quarter. Catching Quist's kick-off, he dashed eighty-five yards toward the Gopher goal before he was forced out of bounds at the Minnesota five yard mark.

Byers Stopped Twice.

Byers was stopped for a loss of five yards. Then Wisconsin tried a pass, but Bierman caught it and dashed out to his thirty yard line before they got him. Sprafka went in for Johnson, who was battered up some. The Gophers gained twice and then Long fumbled on a line plunge and Wisconsin got the ball. On a fake play Byers was thrown for a loss and Simpson punted.

The Gophers tried two plunges for five yards. Bierman then skirted the left side of the Badger line for eighteen yards. A forward pass was nailed by a Badger, but it did no good, for Wisconsin tried a pass of its own, and Quist embraced it. He raced twenty-five yards to the Badger twenty-eight yard line before Pottinger got him from behind.

The Gophers just missed making their distance on the fourth down. Once more it was Wisconsin's ball, but not for long, for a forward pass was caught by Minnesota. Then a Gopher forward pass was caught by Wisconsin and then vice versa. Then it was all over.

YEAR'S BASEBALL EXPENSES REACH $34,000,000 TOTAL.

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 20.—Approximately $34,000,000 is the sum paid out or invested in baseball in this country the last year. This estimate is based on figures of Secretary John H. Farrell of the National Association of Minor League Clubs, combined with estimates of major league expenses. This sum includes $20,000,000 paid out by organized ball for players, salaries, and operating expenses. $13,000,000 invested in baseball plants, and $1,000,000 paid out by the Federals for players and salaries.

SUE WILLARD FOR $40,500; JURY AWARDS THEM $1

Oklahoma City, Okla., Nov. 20.—Damages of $1 were awarded A. H. Cuttrell and A. W. Phillips against Jess Willard, champion heavyweight of the world, by a jury here today. The plaintiffs sued for $40,500, claiming Willard had broken a contract, made four or five years ago which gave them the entire handling of his affairs. They also claimed they had advanced him numerous sums of money during the days when he first was breaking into the fight game here. Willard's deposition was read in lieu of having the big champion here.

Hupmobile

This Car Is Helping to Change Motoring Tastes

The new trend among motor car buyers toward the luxurious sedan type has spread amazingly since the coming of the Hupmobile Sedan.

In many instances, this model is displacing the open touring car.

We believe that a large section of the buying public prefers, for all-year use, a car with a permanent overhead shelter.

And the intense interest created by the Hupmobile Sedan—the numbers of this model already sold in leading centers—confirm our belief.

The advantages of the sedan type are manifest; and the value of the Hupmobile Sedan is equally evident.

This car offers all the luxury and refinement that any sedan can offer; yet its price is very little more than that of a touring car.

No picture can give you an adequate idea of its exterior beauty.

And no words can make you see the charm of its gray Bedford cord upholstery; or feel the soft depth of the cushions; or realize the solid motoring comfort the car will give to the entire family all the year 'round.

When you see the Hupmobile Sedan—which you should do without delay—you will understand why so many open-car owners are giving it their preference.

The Hupmobile Free National Service System—the like of which you get with no other car—is so complete, and means so much genuine satisfaction to the owner, that you should learn all its details before you buy any car. Call and ask us about it.

OLD TIME STARS WANT FOOTBALL MEN NUMBERED

Poll of Former Eastern Heroes Shows Big Demand for New System.

New York, Nov. 20.—The numbering of the Princeton players in the Princeton-Harvard game pleased the spectators so much in the east that the opinions of representative former players on Yale, Harvard, Princeton, and other college teams on the question of all the colleges adopting the system have been obtained.

Out of the opinions of twenty-one former players, including five ex-Harvard captains and three ex-Yale leaders, presented here, only two are opposed to the numbering system. All the Harvard and Yale captains indorse the system.

First Trial by Dartmouth.

Dartmouth was the first of the big eastern football teams to adopt the number system, using it in a game with the Carlisle Indians in 1913. The spectators were pleased with the innovation and many football men were found who favored the players wearing numbers at that time. Soon after Princeton adopted the system, but neither Yale nor Harvard has seen fit to do so.

Edgar N. Wrightington, captain at Harvard in 1896, said:

"I approve of the Princeton system of numbering the players. It makes the game much more interesting to the spectators. If we are going to build big bowls and stadia and have elaborate scoreboard information, all for the benefit of the spectators, why not make the system complete and identify the players accurately, so we can see what they are doing?"

Dr. Hurley Favors System.

Dr. Daniel J. Hurley, Harvard captain in 1904 and 1905, said:

"The innovation of numbering players during the football contests will be a great help to the game. This innovation makes errors more obvious and therefore more easily eradicated. By this means the player, the play, and the team will be improved."

Hamilton Fish, Harvard's 1909 captain, also favors the system, as do Percy L. Wendell, captain in 1912, and Charles Brickley, last year's leader at Cambridge.

"I believe it pleases the spectators," said Fish, "and consequently I look on it favorably. Certainly the numbering of the players does no harm to the game so far as I can see."

"I heartily concur with the theory that the public is entitled to identify football players," Wendell declared. "The colossal size of modern arenas renders the players mere marionettes whose identity is indistinguishable even to their best friends."

Brickley Gives Views.

Brickley declared himself as follows:

"Personally I am heartily in favor of numbering players, because this feature has proved of vast benefit to spectators in understanding what is going on and who actually is doing the work. The option should be vested in each coach and captain as to their use."

Charlie Gould, Yale's captain in 1901, declared in favor of the system as follows:

"As there are no reasons whatever why players should not be numbered and at least one good reason why they should be numbered—namely, that of making it possible for spectators to follow not only the play, but the individual—I strongly favor its adoption."

No Objection, Says Morse.

S. F. B. Morse, captain at Yale in 1906, wired the following opinion:

"Do not see any possible objection to numbering players. Do not feel competent to judge in the matter, as I have not seen a football game for nine years. Offhand it would seem to me a convenience to spectators. Do not understand how it could affect players in any manner."

Fred Daly, who led Yale's 1910 team, said:

"I am in favor of numbering players, since it affords so much pleasure to spectators. I have been opposed to it because of emphasis on individual instead of team. The rule should read players must be numbered instead of recommending that players be numbered, as in the present code of rules."

The general opinion at Princeton, as voiced by Coach Rush, is that the system is a good thing from the standpoint of the spectators and the public press.

"The days have passed," said Rush, "when those who came to see the game could stand along the side lines and easily distinguish the players. With the huge stadiums of the present day it is very desirable to have the men numbered for the benefit of the public."

Boost by Johnny De Saulles.

Johnny De Saulles, former Yale quarter back, declared he was in favor of the numbering system "from the crack of the whip." He said that while he did not believe in the system when it was first tried but, he had been converted since, along with many other football men.

"I helped coach a bit at the University of Virginia this fall," he said, "and saw the Virginia-Vanderbilt game. The players on the two teams wore numbers, and I was able to follow them easily because of this.

"Some opponents of the plan say the games are not played for the public, but for the alumni and undergraduates. I am sure there are many alumni who do not know the players. If they are numbered the alumni, and, in fact, all the spectators, can pick them out. I am heartily in favor of the plan."

Carl Flanders, another former Yale player, also declared in favor of the system. "The numbering system adds to the enjoyment of the game from the spectators' standpoint," he said. "At first I was opposed to the system, but I see now that it is a good thing. I look for the numbers myself, which I guess is a pretty good test of my feelings on the question."

Fans Don't Know Players.

Yale and Harvard will have to adopt the system sooner or later, according to Ad Kelly, former great Princeton back. "The principal reason why the system should be adopted," he said, "is because so many persons attend the games who do not know the players and have to have them pointed out. If the players are numbered these persons can identify each man on the field merely by looking at the numbers on their programs."

Big Bill Edwards and Walter Booth were other ex-Princeton stars who indorsed the numbering system in no uncertain terms. Edwards declared there was little in the argument that plays can be diagnosed more easily when the players wear numbers. He said the public should be considered in the matter, in that it was greatly interested in the games and anxious to pick out the different players, something the numbering system makes possible.

Booth Hits Foes' Argument.

Booth also declared there was nothing in the contention that the numbering system gives away plays. He argued that all the teams should adopt the system, thereby showing consideration for the spectators.

Harry Kersburg, an ex-Harvard player, is opposed to the system. "Most of the spectators know the players," he said, "so there is no necessity of numbering them. The game has gone along well enough without adopting the system, so why should it be put into effect now?" Charlie Hann declared Harvard was against the system and so was he.

Al Journeay, Penn's 1914 captain, is a believer in the system. Ollie Moffet, another ex-Pennsylvania star, and Bradlee Street of Princeton also declared in favor of the numbering system.

Should Meet Public Demand.

Tom Thorpe, one of the greatest players that ever wore the Blue and White of Columbia on the gridiron, declared the colleges should meet the public demand for the system and adopt it. Thorpe now officiates at many games and said he finds it easier to settle contested points and to fix in his mind the players eligible to receive a forward pass when the number system is used.

Coach Metcalfe of Columbia approved of the system from the standpoint of the spectators, but said the system is not so good from the standpoint of a football team.

CALIFORNIA PILES UP BIG SCORE AGAINST NEVADA.

Reno, Nev., Nov. 20.—California, with an advantage of about fifteen pounds in individual weight, overwhelmed Nevada today, 81 to 6. The game was played under frigid conditions, but attracted a large crowd, it being the final contest of the season for the home team.

From the kickoff Nevada was placed on the defensive and California, with a series of line bucks and end runs, carried the ball for the first touchdown in the first five minutes of play. The score at the end of the first quarter was 19 to 0 in favor of California.

At the end of the second period, in a sixty yard run, Martin scored the first touchdown for Nevada when he intercepted a California forward pass and carried it through a scattered field unaided. Brooks of California scored two touchdowns and Gianelli one. At half time California led, 33 to 6.

In the first of the second half California scored three touchdowns, converting two of them. Brooks was responsible for two and Gianelli for one. This brought California's total at the end of the period up to 60, and it added twenty-one more points in the final quarter. Lineup:

Girl Runs Pin Alleys; What Will It Be Next?

WHEN Miss Loretta Hoag of New York became manager of a fighter it was conceded she just about set a record in the matter of new occupation for women. Now comes Miss Hazel Bark of Cleveland into the field and she seems to have Miss Hoag tied. Miss Bark is manager of bowling alleys.

Miss Bark had decided on a musical career, studied long and hard and became an accomplished pianist. Her brother owned bowling alleys. He arranged to start new alleys in another part of the city and was confronted with the proposition of finding some one to properly care for the alleys he already had.

His sister came to the front. She argued that a woman should be able to manage alleys as well as a man. She deserted music for bowling and has done so well her brother would not think of making a change. Miss Bark also has become a bowler and is enthusiastic about the game.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 20.—Charles Ellis of Pittsburgh defeated Charles Morin of Chicago, 50 to 25, in an Interstate Three Cushion league match. Ellis had a high run of 8, running out his string in 57 innings. Morin's high run was 6.

New York, Nov. 20.—Leach Cross defeated Johnny Harvey of New York in a ten round bout last night. Benny Leonard of New York outpointed Joe Azevedo of Sacramento, Cal., in every round after the first, which was even. Matt Wells of England and Young Brown of New York engaged in a fast ten round draw. Wells weighed 138 and Brown 137.

New York, Nov. 20.—William F. Hoppe, balkline champion, defeated Joseph Mayer, former national amateur champion, last night in the 18-2 balkline handicap tourney in the New York theater concert hall, 500 to 163. The champion brought his average up to 31 4-16, while Mayer averaged 10 14-15. Hoppe was unable to reach the century mark in any one inning, but succeeded in getting clusters of 95, 78, and 77. The first close game of the tournament was played in the afternoon between George F. Slosson of this city and Koji Yamada of Japan, the former winning by a margin of nine points, 375 to 366.

CUE PERFORMERS REST FOR WEEK

McCourt Jumps Into Lead in Three Cushion Circuit.

BY J. G. DAVIS.

After two months of play the contestants in the Interstate Three Cushion league will rest this week. The race in the first division is remarkably close, with Charles McCourt of Pittsburgh at the top and Ed Helm of Cleveland a close second.

Clarence Jackson, who led in the early stages and then dropped several places on his first road trip, redeemed himself by winning all five games on his trip last week. He defeated John Moore, Joe Capron, R. Cannefex, the St. Louis player who succeeded Frank Benson; Harry Cooler, and Jess Lean. Ed Helm is the only other player who has won all five games on tour. Jackson has been playing fine billiards and now is generally picked to finish near the top.

Morin Makes Spurt.

Charley Morin, who went around the eastern circuit, made an excellent start, winning his first three games, but losing to Dankleman and then to Ellis, who went out in fifty-seven innings in the best game of the week. Dankleman has been a hard nut to crack, losing only one game on his home table.

"Tod" Hascall of Milwaukee and Hugh Heal of Toledo each lost three of their five road games. August Kleckhefer, the local southpaw, gave another fine display last week when he defeated Hugh Heal, and hopes are high that he will defeat Alfredo De Oro when they play for the world's title here next month.

DENVER HUMBLES COLORADO

Denver, Colo., Nov. 20.—Denver university defeated the University of Colorado, 7 to 0, today for the first time since 1908. The score was registered after Sprague recovered a fumble and raced fifty yards to the ten yard line, Shotwell circling the end for a touchdown. Deeds kicked goal.

The Boulder squad was outplayed throughout the game. Straight football prevailed.

GRINNELL WINS IOWA TITLE.

Mount Vernon, Ia., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Grinnell cinched the Iowa conference football title by beating Cornell college on a muddy field, 13 to 6. Grinnell's heavy backs had the edge on their opponents. Each team made a touchdown, two field goals winning for Grinnell. Grinnell won all its conference games, the season ending today.

MRS. TOM BUNDY HAS WONDERFUL TENNIS RECORD

Beaten Only Four Times in Long Career; Loses to Molla Bjurstedt.

Long Beach, Cal., Nov. 20.—Mrs. Thomas C. Bundy, once tennis champion of the world, who was defeated recently by Miss Molla Bjurstedt of Norway has had a career unique in the annals of lawn tennis.

From her first championship match in 1901, when as 13 year old May Sutton she won the Pacific coast title for women until her marriage in 1912 to Thomas C. Bundy, one of the Pacific coast's most famous masculine players, Mrs. Bundy suffered only three defeats, while her large collection of trophies at the Bundy home near Los Angeles speaks volumes for her many victories.

First Eastern Trip in 1904.

Starting with 1901, Mrs. Bundy won the Pacific coast singles title for five consecutive years. In 1904 she made her first trip east, where she played in the national, middle states, and western championships, to say nothing of minor events wedged in between and in which she met many of the east's most famous woman players.

She won the national title, losing no more than three games in any match. In the middle states event she lost three games in the four matches played, and in the western championship the three games she gave to Miss Wimer in the finals were all she lost in the tournament.

Her victories in these tournaments have been repeated so often that they are an old story and in her defeats lies the greater interest. Mrs. Bundy visited England in 1905, where she won three important titles—the Welsh championship, the championship of the north of England, and the so-called world's championship at Wimbledon.

Beaten at Wimbledon.

In 1906 she was less successful in her invasion of Britain and while she won the other two titles she lost to Miss Kate Douglas as Wimbledon after a hard fight. Mrs. Bundy had played three hard matches in women's and mixed doubles on the preceding day and was unable to stand the pace set by Miss Douglas, who undoubtedly was a wonderful player, and is yet, for that matter, for she has won the English championship four times within the last five years.

In 1907 Mrs. Bundy returned to England in search of her lost laurels and was successful. She met and defeated Mrs. Lambert Chambers (Kate Douglas), whom she had lost to the year before, winning in rather hollow style, 6—1 6—4. London tennis critics in speaking of this match credited Mrs. Bundy with having played the most wonderful tennis she had shown in her three seasons' play in England.

Miss Hotchkiss Greatest Rival.

During the next five years Mrs. Bundy continued winning title after title. During this period her greatest rival was Miss Hazel Hotchkiss (now Mrs. George Wightman) of Berkeley, Cal., whom she met eight times. Mrs. Bundy won six of these eight matches, losing once in a special event during the California interscholastic at Ojai in 1910 and again in 1911 in the international championships at Niagara-on-the-Lake.

After her marriage to Tom Bundy on Dec. 11, 1912, until last July Mrs. Bundy retired from active tournament play. During the Pacific coast sectional doubles, held on the Virginia courts here in July, Mrs. Bundy played a few exhibition matches and was so well satisfied with her game that a few weeks later she entered the women's open singles in the southern California championships, defeating Mrs. Louise R. Williams in the semi-final round, Mrs. Mary K. Browne in the finals, and Miss Florence Sutton in the challenge round. At no time in any of her matches did her play appear forced or hurried.

Just as Good as Ever.

Those who saw her play this summer and compared it with that of a few years ago believe she is now playing fully as strong a game as as perhaps a stronger than when at the height of her championship career.

Target Tips and Hunting Helps by Alfred P. Lane

Send questions to Mr. Lane, care of this paper.

A. B. McC., Westover, Pa.:

Has the Remington .30 high power rifle as much velocity and striking power as other makes of same caliber? Is it strong enough for deer?

Ans. The .30 Remington cartridge is of the same power as the regular 30-30 cartridge. The difference between the .30 Remington cartridge and the standard 30-30 cartridge is that the former is mad rimless and the latter has a rim. Eithe of these cartridges are powerful enough for deer.

J. A. P., Brunswick, Ga.—1. Would the model 1912, 16 gauge repeating shotgun with 26 inch barrel give a similar shooting quality to the model 1897, 16 gauge repeating shotgun, with 28 inch barrel at the longest possible range?

Answer—Yes.

2. Would a model 1912 12 gauge repeating shotgun with 26 inch barrel give similar pattern and penetration to another gun of same make, but with 30 inch barrel? Could the first one at a distance of seventy yards do the same work as the second one? And, if so, why do not the manufacturers supply all the guns with a 26 inch barrel which would be light and beautiful instead of furnishing different lengths up to 32 inches?

Answer—The length of a barrel has nothing to do with the shooting quality. Different length barrels are supplied because they have an effect on the balance of the gun.

3. Sometimes the manufacturers, in recommending one of their guns, say: "We recommend the purchase of the —— grade gun because it is the most gun for the money that has ever been put on the American market." What do they mean? That an imported shotgun of similar price would be better? Or that the same money can buy a better gun in the European market?

Answer—The United States leads the world in the manufacture of low price shotguns. In the high price grades there is little difference, but in the cheap repeating shotguns, for instance, American makes have even no serious competitor in other countries.

4. Which, in your opinion, is best—the English, French, or American shotgun?

Ans.—Individual differences between two guns of the same make are frequently greater than the differences between very high grade shotguns of American or foreign make.

5. I like the Remington and Winchester repeating shotguns—pump action—better than all, but do you not think the above guns could give me similar shooting quality to a high grade double barrel shotgun?

Ans.—The latest experiments seem to indicate that the single barrel shotgun gives better results than the double barrel gun. There are scientific reasons for this, among which are the unequal expansion of the barrels in a double barrel gun owing to the fact that the barrel is supported on one side only. You will really get better shooting from a single barrel gun than from a double barrel gun. When it comes down to brass tacks, though, there isn't much difference, anyway, in the high grade guns. The difference would show more in the single barrel guns in the cheaper grades in comparison with double barrel shotguns.

J. G. D., Didsburg, Alta.—1. I have a single shot .22 rifle (new), but find that by placing it in a vise it scatters about five inches when shot at a target fifty yards distant. What is the trouble?

Ans.—Clamping a rifle in a vise is not the best way to test its accuracy. In fact, it will sometimes cause inaccuracy. The only proper way to test a rifle is by shooting it from a machine rest, a machine made up to hold the rifle, and which will permit it to recoil; or by shooting it from a prone position with a sandbag rest for the muzzle. You do not state what make the rifle you are using is, nor the ammunition you are using. I would try using the rifle as suggested above, and if that does no good try different makes of ammunition.

2. What make single shot rifle, .22 caliber, handling short, long, long rifle and extra long cartridges would you recommend for accuracy?

Ans.—The extra long cartridge is no good. Of the .22 rim fire cartridges the proper ones to use are the .22 short or the .22 long rifle. Do not use .22 shorts in a rifle chambered for .22 long rifle, that is, if you wish to keep your rifle shooting accurately. There are a number of good makes. It would not be fair for me to name any particular ones. Ask your shooting friends.

3. What powder is the least harmful to the barrel? Which is the most powerful of the .22 cartridges?

Ans.—Lesmok or semi-smokeless powder is least harmful to the barrel, and also the most powerful and accurate. I recommend unhesitatingly the use of either of these two powders in preference to either black or smokeless. Smokeless is very hard on the barrel and is not as accurate as the Lesmok or semi-smokeless.

4. Is a choked barrel in a .22 any advantage for power and accuracy?

Ans.—The rifle barrel should be the same diameter all the way through.

5. I have noticed some .22 shells not filled with powder. What is the advantage of this?

Ans.—You do not say what size of .22 shells. BB caps are made with very heavy priming and no powder. I do not advise their use, as the priming composition will tear the very life out of the inside of the barrel.

6. Do other firms than Winchester and Dominion manufacture .22 cartridges?

Ans.—There are a number of English firms manufacturing .22 caliber cartridges. In the United States the principal manufacturers are Remington-UMC Co., Winchester Co., Peters, U. S., and Western. Of the American firms mentioned the Remington-UMC Co. aso have a Canadian factory where .22's and several other sizes are made.

PEACE MEETING AT FRENCH LICK ONLY PHANTOM

Johnson and Comiskey Deny Reports of Conference with Federals.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

"A Plutonic Mystery," or "The Phantom Peace Conference," would be an appropriate title for the latest baseball problem, which concerns the purpose of Federal league officials in pulling off an imaginary conference with organized baseball at French Lick recently.

On their return yesterday from the happy hunting grounds of Wisconsin Presidents Johnson of the American league and Comiskey of the White Sox riddled some of the canards that have flourished in their absence. Chief of these was the report that the master of the White Sox was expected at French Lick to confer with representatives of the National and Federal leagues regarding peace, but "double crossed" the baseball men by trekking north after deer.

Spike French Lick Canard.

It developed that the hotel reservation reported to have been made by President Comiskey at French Lick was wholly imaginary on the part of somebody, because he never even thought of going there. Also it became known that no National or American league representatives made any engagement to meet Federal league officials at the Indiana resort, so that the cleverly advertised conference becomes purely a matter of fiction on somebody's part, and the problem is to ascertain who expected to benefit by the canard. It came out of the recent Federal league meeting in Indianapolis, but what object the Federals could have in conveying the impression that a peace conference was to be held at French Lick defies analysis up to date.

Sox Not After Gandil.

President Comiskey also settled the report that he was angling for Chick Gandil of the Washington club in exchange for Fournier by stating that he still was in possession of his faculties. That he still can shoot was demonstrated visually by the shipment home of a full grown buck, some of which will be served on Thanksgiving day at the home of the White Sox owner. President Johnson declared that he did not even take a gun in hand while in Wisconsin, but merely went into the woods to rest.

GOVERNMENT INTERESTED IN SPEEDING MOTOR BOATS.

The United States government is taking an active interest in the prospective class of motor boats to be used as submarine chasers in case of war. The only things the government is expected to furnish are certain specifications covering scantlings, speed required, and weight of armament. Although larger guns have been mentioned, it is generally believed that one pounders would prove efficient and a speed of at least twenty-five knots necessary.

Professional Men Prefer the "King"

An ever-increasing number of Chicagoans, well known in business and professional life, own King "Eight" cars. Among them is this prominent dentist, Dr. Frank H. Skinner. His letter is worth while. It is the word of a man who can be proud of his judgment of car values. He says:

"Have driven my King '8' 12,176 miles this summer. It is now running even more smoothly than when it first came from the factory. All of the first set of tires ran over 6,000 miles, and I am still using ONE of the original casings, which shows how easy the car is on tires. On good country roads my mileage has run as high as 18 1-6 miles to a gallon of gasoline. My next car will certainly be another King '8.'"

"ECKIE" NAMES ALL-STAR TEAM OF CONFERENCE

Puts Russell of Maroons at Quarter and Makes Him Captain.

BY WALTER H. ECKERSALL.

Following one of the most successful years in the last decade, the time has arrived to honor the players who have done the most consistent playing in western conference games. The stars selected for the first eleven have not been picked for their playing in any one contest, but they have been honored more because of the value they have been to their respective elevens in every contest.

Before going into detail it is well to mention why Pogue and Clark of Illinois have not been placed on the first honorary eleven. No one will dispute the fact that each is a player of the first water, but neither has taken part in every game. Their loss greatly weakened the team in the games played in mid-season, especially in the Ohio State contest. Had either or both taken part in every contest or the greater parts of the games, they would have been placed on the first honorary selection.

Team of Star Performers.

The players chosen are known to be performers who can be relied upon to play stellar football against any kind of odds. They have shown this quality on several occasions, and it is this football essential which has been taken into consideration in making the selections.

In making the choices the writer not only gathered his information by being a spectator and official, but data was gathered from other arbiters and authorities. In most cases they agreed that the player chosen was entitled to be honored, but such teams naturally cannot be picked to the satisfaction of every follower of the game.

Essentials for Backfield.

As most coaches and close followers of the game know, a team must be sent on the field well versed in all departments of offensive and defensive play. The backfield must be composed of a good running back and a full back who can hit the line for a yard or two when this distance is needed on a fourth down, while the other half back should combine as far as possible end running and line smashing ability. It is needless to add that the three backs should be proficient in heading interference.

In considering offensive play, especially under the present rules, a team must be fortified with a kicker who can boot goals from the field or punt with accuracy and for distance. This team with Macomber or Russell would be prepared to attempt to score points by the aerial route if other means of gaining ground fail.

Switch Buck for Defense.

On defense, the team could be so arranged as to secure the best results. A coach would be foolish to allow Capt. Buck of Wisconsin to play in the line when the opposing team had the ball. A wise mentor would place him at defensive quarter back and move one of the backs to his position at tackle. The Badger's defensive playing in the Chicago game was the striking feature, and if it had not been for his efforts the Maroons would have won by a much larger score. He undoubtedly is one of the best all around linemen ever developed at Madison.

Pete Russell, captain of this year's University of Chicago team, is placed at quarter back and made captain of the honorary eleven. The Maroon was a more finished player this year than last and was a factor in every game played, handles the ball cleanly, and is strong on defense when playing in the full back's position.

Safety First with Russell.

Russell also is a sure and safe player. In the Wisconsin game he allowed several punts to strike the ground when he was not sure of catching the oval in his own territory. In many other ways he showed the finish which made him the most valuable player on the team. Although he was a marked man in every contest, he got away several times for runs when Chicago needed distance badly.

Clark's ability as a quarter back is not overlooked, but because he did not play in all of Illinois' games, Russell is given the call. The Orange and Blue player is a classy performer, and if he had taken part in every game, it probably would have been a tossup between him and Russell. Long of Minnesota is another good quarter back who will bear watching next season. He gives promise of developing into just as valuable a player as Johnny McGovern, the former star of Gopher teams. Driscoll of Northwestern and Gross of Iowa played good football all season.

Baston Best End in West.

Baston of Minnesota is unquestionably the best end in the west, and is placed at the right extremity of the line. The Gopher is a powerful defensive player of that type which always turns a play in so that one of his teammates can nab the runner. He was used to carry the ball on some of the numerous Minnesota shift plays, and he covered punts in faultless fashion.

Squier of Illinois is given the other wing position, although it cannot be said he is far the superior of Quist of Minnesota, who is placed on the second eleven. The downstater, although not at his best early in the season because of injuries, came strong at the close of the season and showed the same form as last year, when he was looked upon as one of the best ends in this section. With Baston and Squier on the ends of the line, a team would have trouble to make consistent headway by driving off the tackles or running the ends.

Badger a Star at Tackle.

Buck of Wisconsin should be the unanimous selection of all critics for tackle. There is little about line play which this player does not know, and if eastern critics care to take a slant at any western players in making their selections for All-America elevens, they should give the Badger the once over.

Playing 50 per cent better football than he did last year, Shull of Chicago is placed at the other tackle. He was the best player in the Maroon forward wall and it was not an unusual occurrence to see him go to the other side of the line to tackle the runner when plays were sent off that side. Buck and Shull make a strong pair of tackles, and as both have played their allotted three years of college football, their experience would stand them in good stead. Randolph of Northwestern and Boughton of Ohio State were another good pair.

Gopher at Right Guard.

Dunnigan of Minnesota is placed at right guard, although he has not had the experience of other linemen. The Gopher has been a power on offense and defense all season, and is entitled to the position because of hard, consistent playing. He is a player who is quick to size up plays, and he moves to the points of attack with speed, and generally stops plays before much ground has been gained.

Capt. Blocker of Purdue has been placed at the other guard because of the value he has been to the Boilermaker team this year. Blocker has played tackle, guard, and center, and as he is a third year man knows the game and gave his best efforts to the institution situated on the banks of the Wabash. Stromberg of Northwestern and Barron of Iowa were other good forwards.

Watson of Illini at Center.

Watson, captain of this year's Illinois team, is placed at center. The Orange and Blue player possesses all the qualifications of the position and stands out alone among the conference centers. He is generally an accurate passer of the ball, although he made a bad pass in the Minnesota game. Illinois employs so many shift plays that on one formation Watson had to make short fast passes while on other plays he had to hurl the ball considerable distances. He was equally effective on the defense and generally mixed in every play. Hanson of Minnesota was another good center.

Macomber of Illinois is placed at right half back. The selection is made because of the value he has been to the team this year. If it had not been for Macomber's playing in the Ohio State game Coach Zuppke's eleven would have gone down in defeat. Aside from his strong offensive and defensive playing he made the field goal in the closing minutes of play which enabled his team to trot off the field with a tie score and saved it from the humiliation of a defeat from a supposedly weaker eleven.

Macomber an All Around Man.

The Illinois half back is a good all around back. He can run the ends or hit the line for equal results and is accurate in hurling forward passes. Added to this is his field goal and punting ability. On defense he is equally effective. He solves plays quickly and tackles hard and with the desired result.

The other half back position is given to Byers of Wisconsin, who has been the most consistent ground gainer on the team this year. Although chosen it cannot be said the Badger has much of an edge on Ballentyne of Minnesota. Byers is a fast, elusive player, who is hard to stop once he gets started in the open. He has reeled off several long runs this year and he would make a good running mate for Macomber.

Bierman, captain of this year's Gophers, is placed at full back, a position he has played to the satisfaction of Coach Williams since the disqualification of Solon. The Gopher is a powerful line plunger, who picks holes with surprising quickness. He runs with eyes open and veers in whichever direction there many be an opening. He is one of the most valuable men in the interference in the big nine colleges, and his defensive play is in accord with his offensive work.

Such a team as named would be a worthy opponent for any similar eleven in the country. Given plays and coached to perfect team play, it would be a hard aggregation to beat. The players have had the experience to stand the brunt of a hard fought struggle and the team has been selected after consideration of the play of every member of the nine elevens.

THE DAYS OF REAL SPORT.

YOST TO RETURN TO WOLVERINES FOR 1916 SEASON

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Fielding H. Yost will return to Michigan next fall as varsity football coach. This was the positive statement made yesterday by athletic association officials, and it puts a quietus on all the reports which have been current this week to the effect that the veteran gridiron mentor was considering a change.

Rumors of the change were given the greater credence because of the miserable showing of the Wolverines on the football field this season. Reports from the east to the effect that Yale was considering the retention of Yost as coach because of its bad showing this fall gave still further impetus to the report. Yost has been in the east since the Pennsylvania-Michigan game, one week ago today, and this has again given rise to the reports. But athletic association officials are vehement in their assertions that Yost will be back at Michigan for next year.

Contract Closed for 1916.

The contract has already been closed. The terms of the general agreement under which Yost is working at Michigan provide that the contract shall automatically continue for another year unless one of the two parties shall announce his withdrawal at least thirty days before the close of the season. No such notice of withdrawal has been given by either Yost or the athletic association, so the contract is in full force and effect.

That there will be radical changes in the makeup of the coaching staff for another season is practically certain. The most drastic of these involves the withdrawal of Assistant Coach "Germany" Schulz from the staff. It is known that several middle western universities are working hard to get Schulz as head coach and it is understood that he has tentatively accepted some one of the offers. Schulz, it is understood, is anxious to get a position as head coach some place, now that he has served his coaching apprenticeship under the wizard Yost.

Others May Be Missing.

It is also stated to be likely that the second assistant coach, Ernest Allmendinger, a member of the 1913 Michigan varsity eleven, will be seen as head coach elsewhere next year, and will thus not be back under Yost. James Raynsford, captain of the 1914 eleven and one of Yost's assistants this fall, will not be back, as he will be graduated this year and will immediatoly enter the engineering profession.

As a result of all these changes it is intimated that Michigan may next year return to the old system whereby Yost alone will coach the varsity, being assisted only by the graduates before the big games.

INDIANA.

Bloomington Ind., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Indiana will go strong for wrestling again this year with a record of having lost only one dual meet with a western university in the last two years. Last year the Hoosier grapplers won a larger score than the year before, but only tied for the western conference title, as the points were bunched with three entries, Nebraska, Iowa, and Indiana.

The squad has already started work this season under Davis, who was conference heavyweight champion two years ago. Several of the candidates are men who were on the varsity football squad in the season just closed and who are toughened up for the real grind which will start the coming week.

One of the berths left vacant by graduation is the 125 pound weight. Woolridge, a scrappy freshman featherweight of last year, seems the most likely contender. He is a little under weight, but makes up for this deficiency by his extraordinary speed. Rumble is also out in this weight and is looked upon as a good prospect.

THREE HURLERS GAIN FAME BY NO-HIT GAMES

BY HANDY ANDY.

In American association pitching performances for 1915 three no-hit games stand out as notable achievements as contrasted with the failure of all 1914 hurlers to enter the Hall of Fame, which a bucket of whitewash with no hits attached makes possible.

These honor men were Harper of Minneapolis, who slammed the Saints at Minneapolis on May 19; Dan Tipple of Indianapolis, who humiliated Cleveland on June 25, and Larry O'Toole of Columbus, who enhanced his reputation on his home lot at the expense of Cleveland on July 2.

In the matter of low hit games—those in which three hits or less were registered by one team in the regulation period of nine innings or more—the year of 1915 also surpassed 1914, the respective totals being forty-eight and forty-three. These were divided as follows:

	1915.	1914.
Three hits	32	28
Two hits	13	13
One hit	0	2
No hits	3	0
Totals	48	43

Appended is a list of low hit games, with those of less than nine innings appended for purposes of reference only:

BOXING BODY CLOSES DOORS FOR MEETING

New Association Adopts Gumshoe Methods; Censors Report.

BY RAY C. PEARSON.

The American Boxing Association of the United States is still in the game, and intends to be a lasting organization, according to those who are back of it. But there is one thing that a lot of people who are mixed up in the pugilistic game would like to know, and that is why "gumshoe" methods are being employed by the promoters behind it.

Several months ago the promoters gave out the information that the association which was formed in Cleveland would hold an important meeting in Chicago. The date was set for Nov. 14, but when the scribes wanted to find out something about the session the day before it was scheduled to be held they found it more difficult to locate the promoters than it is to find a bunch of Federal league baseball magnates and organized baseball moguls hobnobbing together for the purpose of settling their diamond warfare.

Search of Hotels Fruitless.

A chase around the hotels of Chicago failed to turn up Matt Hinkel of Cleveland, president of the boxing association, Tom Andrews of Milwaukee, or any of the other "guns" of the organization. They did not hand out a single line of advance dope by mail or otherwise to indicate what action they intended to take at the meeting, and the fact that they kept "under cover" prevented the fight scribes from getting hold of any real news.

But the members of the organization held their meeting as scheduled, which seems ample proof that they intend business. The session was held at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago, and there were present President Matt Hinkel, Tom Andrews of Milwaukee, Gene Malady of Omaha, Thomas Sullivan of St. Louis, Mike Collins of Hudson, Wis., Sam Howard of Oshkosh, and Mark Shaughnessy of Minneapolis. It was a star chamber session, according to a bit of information that leaked out after the promoters had finished telling each other what they thought of the crop of fighters now doing business.

Give Out Censored Report.

No scribes were admitted to the meeting, but after it was all over and the promoters were ready to depart for their homes a story telling of the action that had been taken was sent out to the newspapers by the "newspaper secretary" of the organization. It was well censored "copy," and the sporting editors had to use it as it came out or let it alone. Of course it was used, for it was news, but it is pretty nearly a lead pipe cinch that there was considerable doing at the meeting that never got into print.

Just why the promoters of this organization, which seems to be just what is needed to help the sport, resort to the old gumshoe stuff isn't as hard to figure out as some people might think. The business of keeping things under cover is principally due to the fact that a good many of the boxers and their managers have sought to make the new organization look like a joke. The managers of most of the big scrappers do not believe that the boxing association has enough strength to stand on its own legs, according to the pilot of one fighter, who, incidentally, is a champion.

Manager Derides New Body.

This manager was in Chicago not long before the meeting of the promoters' association and was asked if he knew where the association was to hold its meeting and if he was aware of what action might be taken. His reply, and it might be taken as the one that any manager might make, shows that the association isn't considered of great importance.

"Nobody is paying any attention to this new boxing organization," said this manager, who doesn't care to have his name mentioned. "Why, there isn't anything to it, and I doubt that it can control the sport as at present constituted. There are really only two big promoters in it. These are Matt Hinkel, the president, and Tom Andrews of Milwaukee. The rest of the promoters aren't strong enough to cut much ice when it comes to telling the boxers and managers what they should do.

Must Get More Big Men.

"It strikes me that they'll have to get a lot more of the big men of the country into their organization before they will have the power to control boxing. For instance, they haven't even a New York promoter in their ranks. Then there are other sections of the country that must be represented. For instance, they'd need Tommy Burns or Dominick Tortorich of New Orleans. Without the big guns they'll have a hard time trying to tell the boxers what they must or must not do."

Rival Body Contemplated.

Still another reason is that the promoters have heard the rumors that the boxers and managers were planning to get together and form an organization to fight the one formed at Cleveland. Jimmy Dunn of Cleveland, manager of Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion of the world, and numerous other scrappers, is said to be the bell wether of the fighting men and their managers. Dunn's activity, it is claimed, is due to the fact that the Wisconsin boxing commission has barred Kilbane from boxing in the Badger state because he put up a "stalling" battle against Ritchie Mitchell there.

Perhaps the strongest move of the American association is that the members are to get in touch with the various boxing commissions and will make an effort to work in harmony with them. The organization also has named several boxers who are considered of sufficient class to be termed championship possibilities, and suggests that elimination tournaments be held in all classes to determine which fighter is the rightful one to hold the title. Those accorded places follow:

Welterweights—Mike O'Dowd, Soldier Bartfield, Kid Graves, Packey McFarland, Willie R'chie, Jack Britton, and Ted Lewis.

Middleweights—Young Ahearn, Mike Gibbons, Jeff Smith, George Chip, Jimmy Clabby, and Eddie McGoorty.

Flyweights—Frankie Izzo, John Pappas, Artie Armstrong.

Light heavyweight—Jack Dillon recognized.

[illegible]htweights—Willie Ritchie is given ninety days to defend his title at 133 pounds or forfeit same, in which event it is recommended [illegible] Charley White and Johnny Dundee battle for the American title.

NEBRASKA TEAM TROUNCES IOWA BY 52-7 SCORE

Visitors Unable to Stop Fierce Rushes; Chamberlain Is Star of Game.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 20.—Developing an offensive style of play against which Iowa was almost powerless to stop, Nebraska today closed the football season of 1915 with a victory by the one sided score of 52 to 7. Only at one stage of the game did Iowa appear dangerous. That was toward the close of the second period. But the spurt was short lived.

Chamberlin, as usual, was the Nebraska star, but he divided honors with Rutherford, Cook, Calley, and Corey. Iowa's ground gainers were Laun, Gross, and Fosdick.

Iowa's single touchdown was something of a fluke, a fumbled punt by Cook being grabbed by an Iowa half back, who ran over the Nebraska goal without interference.

Two Scores for Cornhuskers.

As the teams lined up, Nebraska appeared to have slight advantage in weight. Laun kicked off for Iowa. Chamberlain made thirty yards around right end. A fumble gave Iowa the ball, and Gross made a beautiful sprint to the Nebraska twenty yard line. Iowa lost the ball on a fumble, and Cook ran it back twenty yards. On the next play Chamberlain dodged and squirmed sixty yards for a touchdown. Corey kicked goal. Score: Nebraska, 7; Iowa, 0.

On straight line plunges Rutherford went over for another touchdown. The kickout failed, and the score stood Nebraska, 13; Iowa, 0, as the quarter ended.

Chamberlain Sprints 65 Yards.

Right on the kickoff of the second quarter Chamberlain skirted the end for a sixty-five yard run and his second touchdown. Corey's kick fell short of goal. A long punt by Laun was fumbled by Cook and Fosdick grabbed the ball. With interference he trotted leisurely over the Nebraska goal. Davis kicked goal. Score: Nebraska, 19; Iowa, 7.

Chamberlain made his third touchdown in the next two minutes of play and Corey kicked goal, making the score: Nebraska, 26; Iowa, 7. Cook made another touchdown for Nebraska. Corey kicked an easy goal. The half ended with the score Nebraska, 33; Iowa, 7.

Caley Makes Two Touchdowns.

Caley went in for Cook in the third quarter and signalized his entry by a forty yard run, making a touchdown possible for Rutherford and a goal kick by Cosey. Caley made another touchdown for Nebraska, and the score stood: Nebraska, 46; Iowa, 7.

Three forward passes in succession gave Nebraska another touchdown, but goal was missed. The game ended with the score: Nebraska, 52; Iowa, 7. Lineup:

The Tribune has secured reproductions of the most famously beautiful pictures that, until fear of their destruction by Taube bombs caused them to be hidden, hung in the famous Luxembourg galleries in Paris. On this page is reproduced another of the series which will appear every week in The Sunday Tribune.

BY ANNE ELLIS.

NOW and again there comes among us a flying spirit, like a swift bird swooping accidentally through the interior of a house, smiting our startled vision and bringing us momentarily nearer to the meaning of this phenomenon which we call life. Such a one was Marie Bashkirtseff, writer, musician, artist, personality, beauty. Such was her brief beating of wings against a wall, flights skyward that ended in hitting a ceiling until the merciful hand of early death released her into the untried night.

She was the daughter of noble Russian parents who were separated when Marie was a child. There was no divorce, merely one of those inevitable decisions that came too late. The mother took the children to live with her widowed sister, after which the Bashkirtseffs became wanderers on the continent, living now at Nice, now at Paris, now at Rome, accompanied by an army of servants. At home everywhere and home nowhere. Her mother and her aunt adored Marie, she spoke of them as "my two mothers," and her cousin, a colorless girl slightly older than she, was her slave. There was nothing they denied her in wishes and nothing she spared them in willfulness.

This environment augmented in her that cosmopolitan character of which all geniuses seem to partake. She had the tragic contumacy of her Russian progenitors, it is true, and from her love of all things French and from her residence in Paris she absorbed many characteristics, her energy, her artistry, but she was of no class and no nation.

When she was 12 years old she began to write her journal. Already she had a sort of philosophy, gleaned in part from the fashionable society in which she moved and partly from the constant companionship of her elders, but which only the abnormality of her mind could have evolved. During the first stay in Nice she imagines herself in love with a picturesque and middle aged duke. "I love him so much—it is a very old fashioned phrase," she writes, "since people no longer love. Women love men for money, and men love women because they are the fashion, or on account of their surroundings."

But in spite of its evident sophistication, this is the most hopefully youthful entry in the diary. She was a little girl playing at being in love—a precocious little girl hero worshiping. Her observations show in much greater degree what manner of prodigy she was: "O, how disagreeable is Italy on account of the Italians. We pass cities, cottages, huts, and in each dwelling are people talking, loving, quarreling, bestirring themselves; each human creature no bigger than a fly has its joys and sorrows." Later she observes: "How comical Paris is in the morning."

During her wanderings she studied constantly, for she was eaten up by an overweaning ambition and she saw study as the high road to accomplishment. Music, the stage, literature, art, all attracted her, she had a promising voice and a fine stage presence, but it was art that prevailed. Her master, M. Julian, draws a vivid pen picture of her entering his atelier with her mother and aunt. Both older women were in mourning and Marie standing between them was dressed in white entirely. She was above average height, with blond hair, striking gray eyes, and a remarkable grace of carriage. Mme. Bashkirtseff brought a letter of introduction from a noted physician, a common friend of M. Julian and the Bashkirtseff family. It contained the warning: "I send you a little monster."

M. Julian had misgivings about his new pupil, he saw disorganization following in the wake of this indulged daughter of wealth among the half starved dreamers he had for pupils. But after she had been in the atelier a few weeks working harder than the most impecunious of them, no one deplored more than she the hindrance that her wealth and position were to her studies. Soon she had left her fellow students far behind her. She was exhibiting at the salons, painting portraits of celebrities, getting herself talked of by juries and artists.

Aside from her accomplishments her personality and judgment were a force in the world of art. She was an advocate of impressionism before the days of the impressionists. She had the critical faculty and dared to use it. She extolled the work of Sargent when the studio voices were quibbling about his manner. She was forever trying to convince her contemporaries that technique is not art. Nor was her interest in art alone, she was in touch with all the worth while music, she read constantly, and out of her admiration for Guy de Maupassant she wrote him a whimsical letter. Because the letter was clever and because he was bored he answered it. Correspondence but no serious love affair resulted.

In the midst of her success and comparative happiness Marie's health began to fail. Almost from the first she realized what dread disease was clutching. She fought valiantly but hopelessly. But it was for her art she fought, not her life. She could hardly be persuaded to leave her easel for her meals.

It was at this time, too, that she became interested in the work of Jules Bastien-Lepage. From her admiration for his work to her admiration for the man was but a step, since they were one. Nowhere in the world could one have been found more likely to win his honest, simple peasant heart than this subtle, volatile, aristocratic young Russian girl. But it was too late for Bastien-Lepage as it was too late for Marie. Days came when he had to be wheeled in to see her lying on her couch. "Ah," he would exclaim, "if I had but the strength to paint you."

Marie was 24 years old when she died. It was as she would have wished—the disease took her quickly—she was beautiful to the end. She went before she shocked the sensitive, tender eyes of her friend, who survived her just six months.

This picture, which hangs in the Luxembourg, is the most popular of her works. It is certainly remarkable as the product of a young and feminine mind. It shows the sculpturous quality which characterized her work better than any other single example, and brings vividly before us the fact of her extreme sensitiveness to the beauty of realism. Here at once is depicted the pathos and the "speck of motley" which is universal. Her figures represent equally the street gamins of Paris and the boyhood of the world. She delights us in "The Meeting" with that same sympathy and humor which gave De Maupassant pause.

Next week another painting from the Luxembourg galleries will be reproduced.

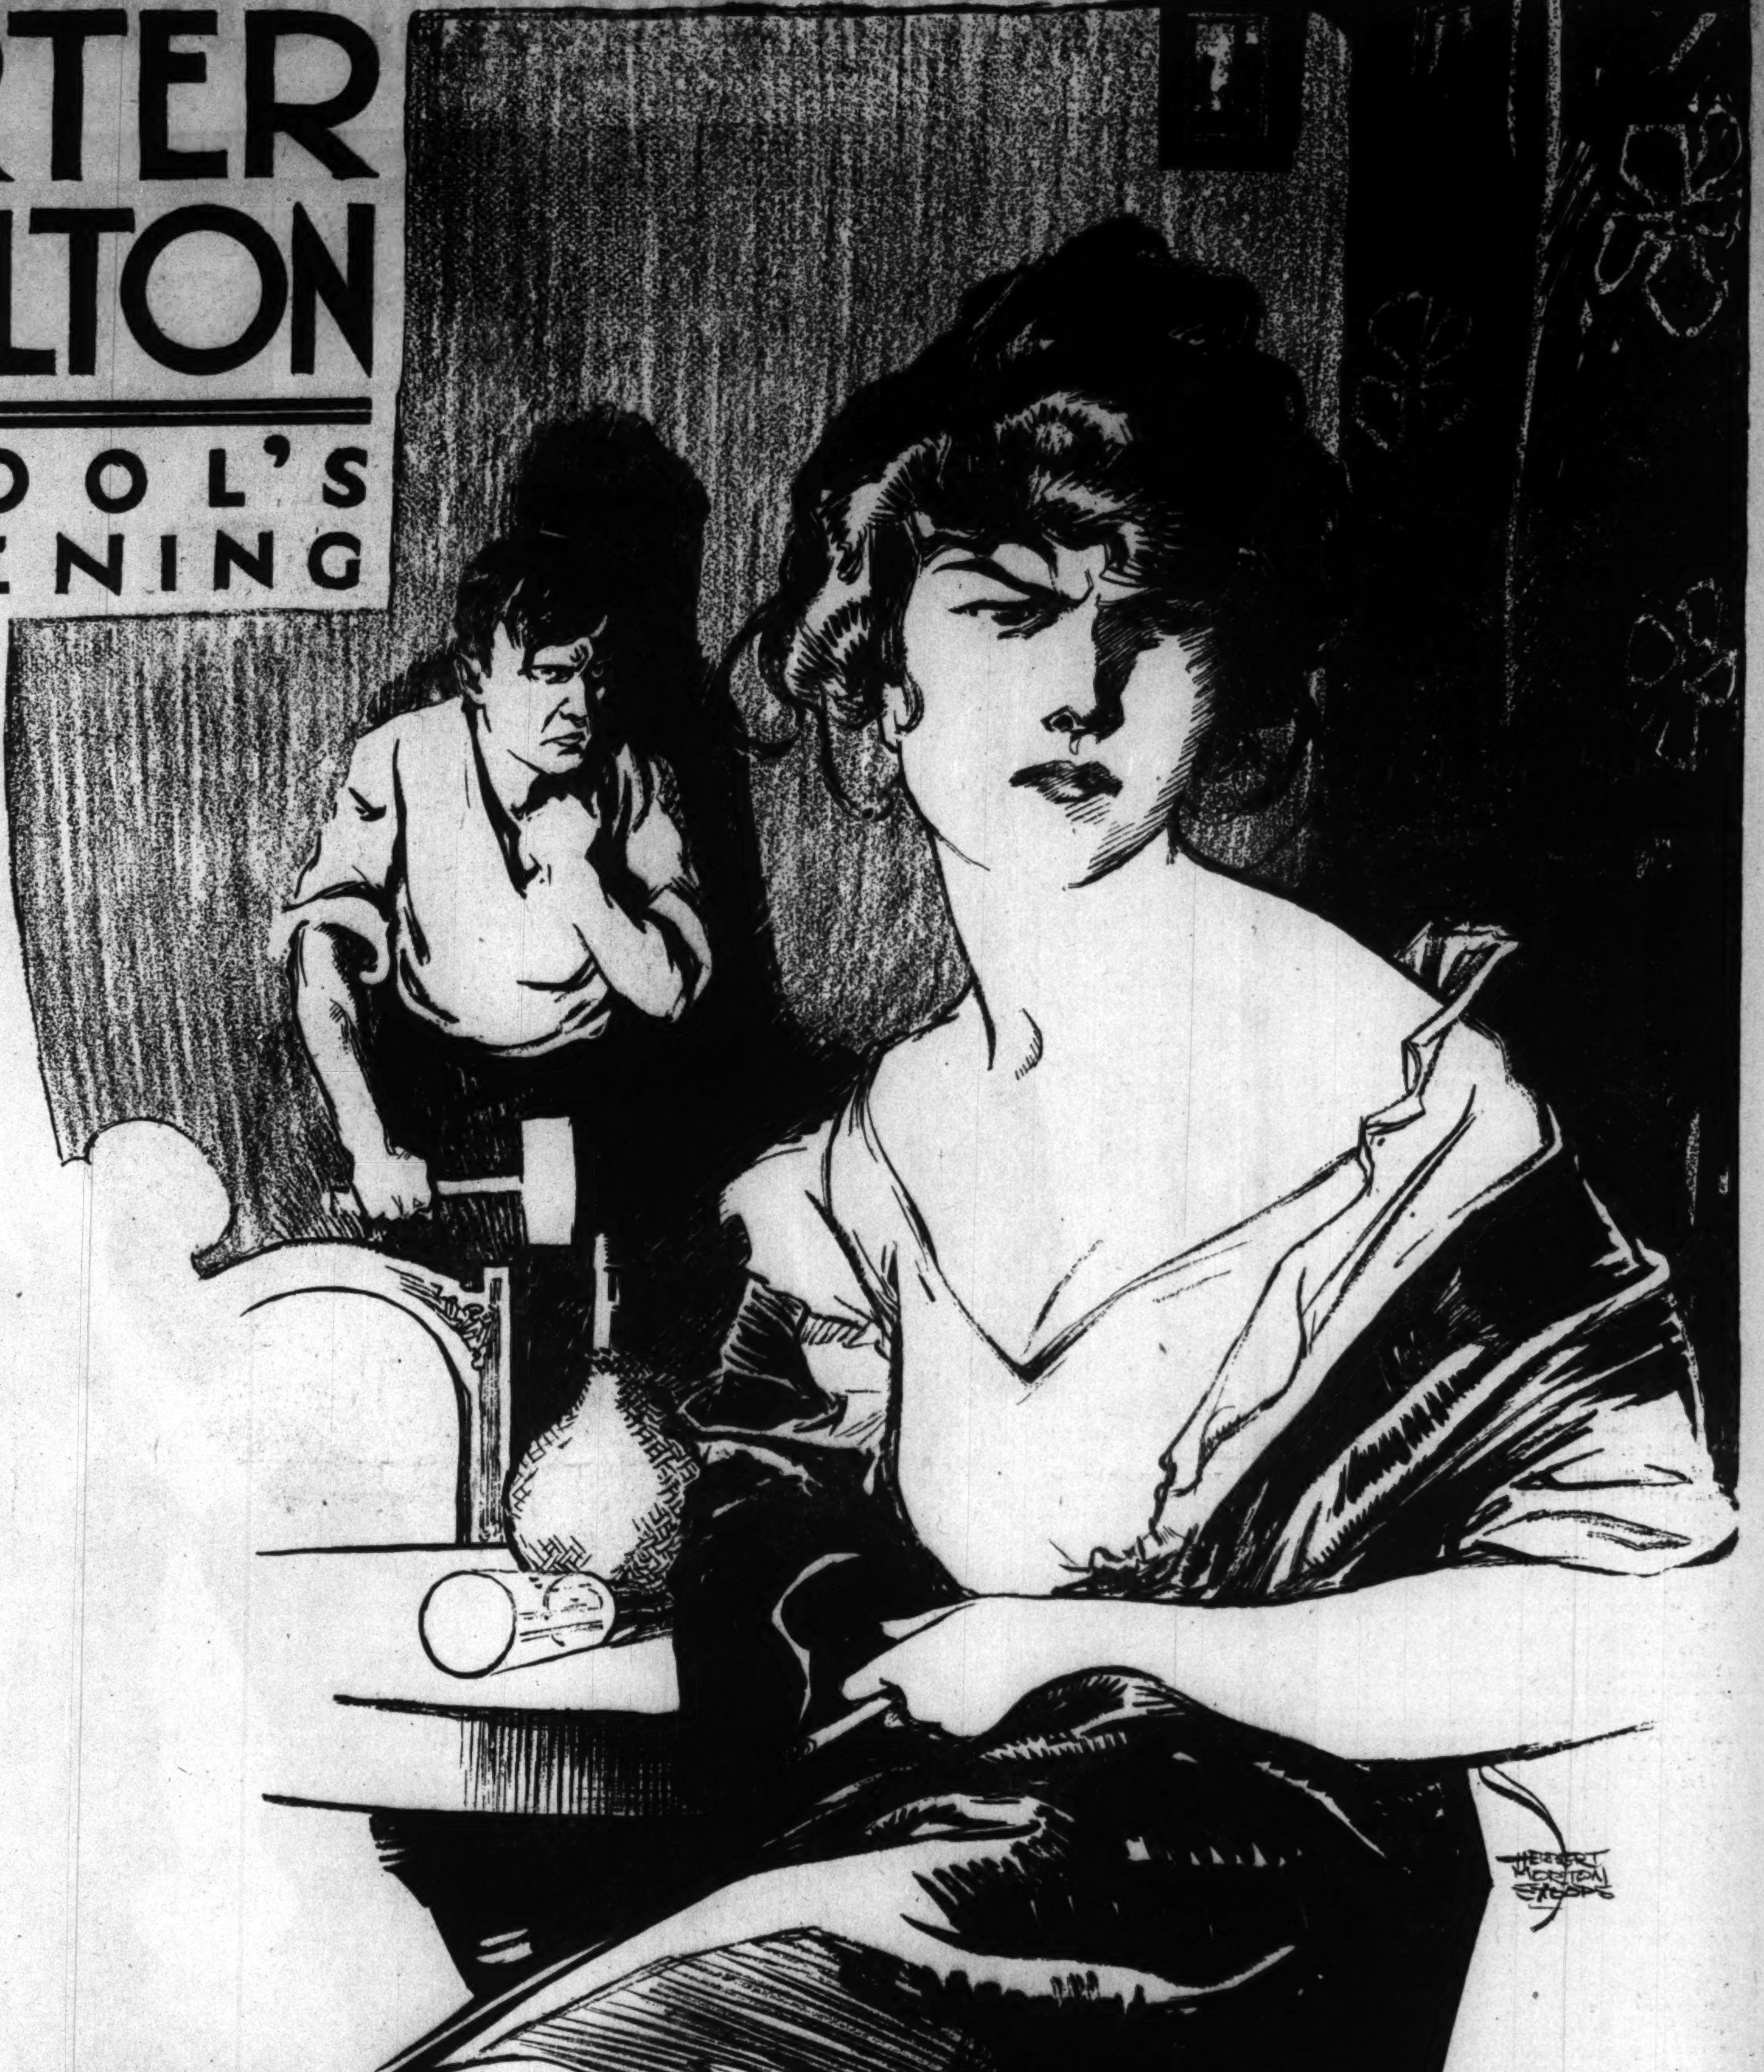
PORTER CHARLTON

A FOOL'S AWAKENING

In Forty-eight Hours Porter Charlton Will Be a Free Man. Five Years Ago He Startled the World with the Horrors of the Murder He Committed. His Victim Was His Bride, Her Grave the Beautiful Lake Como Beside Whose Waters They Were Supposed to Be Enjoying a Magical Honeymoon. But the Jury Was Italian, the Crime "Passionelle," and After Waiting Trial for Nearly Six Years He Has Finally Been Acquitted.



"Keep the past in its grave;
Don't let its ghost haunt you!"

IN two days Porter Charlton goes free. The great stone jail at Lake Como where he has lain for so many weary months will know him no more, and, breathing deep in his new, sweet liberty, he will return to America to forget—or to remember.

By his own confession Porter Charlton committed a deed which in the telling seems diabolism personified. In a little villa by Lake Como in the twilight of a magical Italian sunset he clubbed his bride of a month to death with a mallet, crushed her palpitating body into a trunk, and hurled the heavy burden into the fast darkening waters. Thus ended that briefest of honeymoons, that honeymoon which was to have been so wondrous mad that they fled from the world in order that they might enjoy it to the full.

But the jury that tried Porter Charlton was a jury of Italian men, and his was a "crime passionelle." And that fiery particle called the Latin soul deals gently with deeds that are emotion swayed. Those men, who could not have understood a calculating crime nor have dealt coldly with it, responded instantly in their judgment to a spark of that same passion which moved Charlton in action. They condemned him to six years and eight months' imprisonment. Deducting from this period, however, the amnesty granted him under the law and the time that he had already spent in prison awaiting trial, which was over five years and which always counts in Italian eyes, he was pronounced free in exactly twenty-nine days from the time his sentence was pronounced. The day he was condemned was Oct. 25 of this year. Twenty-nine more days brings it to Nov. 23, which will be the day of his freedom, the day after tomorrow.

Will he sleep as deep and perfect a sleep the first night of his freedom as he slept the night of his crime? For, according to his own story, returning to their villa after having just plunged the trunk and body in the lake, he threw himself on the bed and fell into a deep sleep, such sleep as men enjoy sometimes on the eve of their executions. And will he dream again in review the short, tragic story of their infatuation as he dreamed it on that first dreadful night?

Meets Woman With a Past.

He had seen her for the first time in "Peacock alley" of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, New York. He was barely 20, she was twice that age. He was refined, college bred, working hard as a clerk in the National City bank. His father, Judge Charlton, had placed him there through personal influence, but the boy was making good and every one liked him.

Mrs. Mary Scott Castle was antipodal in type. She was the grass widow of Neville Castle, a San Francisco lawyer, whom she had ruined by her willful, reckless expenditures. She had also been on the stage, where she had achieved anything but an enviable success, and she had furthermore drawn a real notoriety upon herself by the attempted killing of William B. Craig, a New York broker.

Then she met Charlton. She told him of her past and she won his sympathy. She played her charms upon him as she well knew how, and she wrested from him a desperate infatuation. They were secretly married in a short time after they first met, this pale young stripling and the fascinating but utterly unscrupulous woman of the world.

They learned about each other rapidly after that. She learned that he had consumption and that he must go away if his life was to be saved. He learned that she was addicted to drugs, that she was subject to violent fits of depression and outbursts of passion. Other things he learned, too, that have never been published, it is said, but which went far to influence the Italian jury in their lenient verdict.

Plan Honeymoon in Italy.

A year's honeymoon, they decided a week after their marriage, would be a fitting concomitant for such a love as theirs. They would spend it in Italy. Where the funds came from for the trip which they took no one knows. It is thought she sold her jewels. She had several rich admirers at the time she met Charlton, and they had covered her with rare presents. They went from London to Paris, then to the Riviera, and then to the quiet of Como.

Neighbors disagree over the state of their feelings towards one another. Sometimes they quarreled so violently that the woman's screams and the man's oaths could be heard by parties out on the lake. Other times they could be seen strolling up and down the shores or drifting about on the sky blue waters, apparently absorbed utterly each in the other.

Then came the day in June—the 8th. It had been a wonderful day. They had been out for a long walk, and those who had seen them have said they were laughing and talking in gay fashion. In the evening, though, the woman complained of being tired. Their debts were pressing them. She began to taunt her husband with many things.

The hidden devil in the boy leaped to the surface. He seized the wooden mallet that he was mending the sofa with and hurled himself upon her.

It was daylight when he woke from his heavy sleep. A broken statuette of Love lay on the floor. Everywhere around him shrieked out of his crime.

The day before he had written a letter to Capt. Scott, giving him a list of people to whom Mrs. Charlton wished announcements sent. He mailed this and also wrote several other letters saying he had been called away by cable and caught a boat in a few days to America from Genoa. He was "Jack Coleman," and he came back to this country second class.

All would have been well if it had not been that Italian fishermen got their nets caught in the trunk lodged at the bottom of Lake Como and pulled it to the surface. The mangled body was soon identified as Mrs. Charlton and the peaceful Lake Como had a sensation it has not yet entirely rallied from.

Cables to New York burned with the news, and when Porter Charlton arrived in Hoboken the captain of the ship identified him through his picture and he was arrested.

He confessed almost immediately that he had killed her, "in a moment of fury," he said, at things she had called him which he could not stand. Once he had confessed, he seemed relieved, and he was promptly taken to the Hudson county jail in Jersey City. There he remained for three years, until he was finally taken back to Italy.

Judge Charlton, of course, left no stone unturned in preparing the boy's defense. Several noted allenists were secured to declare him temporarily insane. All kinds of complications came about over the extradition laws, it being urged that Italy always refused to deliver up her own subjects after they had fled there following some Black Hand crime; why should our government give up Charlton? Finally this side of the case came up before Judge Blair, sitting as a federal magistrate. The government refused to go back on the treaty with Italy of 1868, and after it was determined that Charlton really was the man demanded by Italy he was returned.

He was taken to the prison at Como about Sept. 1, 1913, and there remained until the present day. Italian processes of law are slow. Since insanity was to be urged, he had to be put under observation. The doctor for the government declared him perfectly sane. The doctor for the defense thought him subject to temporary fits of insanity.

There is no death penalty in Italy, but there is solitary confinement for the natural life, which always results in madness in a few years and generally death. Twenty years was more possible for him, though, as he was considered a second degree murderer, not having killed with premeditation. None of his lawyers thought he would receive a severe sentence.

The time spent in prison before the trial was always considered; his social standing, the fact that he was an American, and also that the woman whom he killed was so much older than himself all worked in his favor. When the jury went out to give its decision Charlton said with tears in his eyes: "I trust entirely to Italian justice. I can only say I am a most unfortunate man."

Apparently the jury thought the same, for it returned the verdict that in their eyes he had but twenty-nine days more to serve.

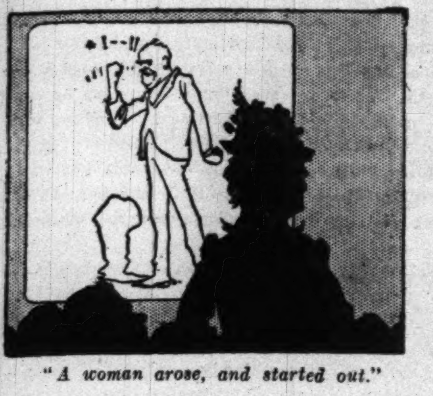
Right off the Reel by Mae Tinee

IT'S EASY TO SEE WHAT THEY SAY ON THE SCREEN.

THE audience in a moving picture theater I visited recently was sitting watching with tense interest a picture which, widely advertised, was living up to all that had been claimed for it, when, suddenly, a stir was caused in my immediate vicinity by a woman who arose, and, as she started out with her companion, remarked:

"Such atrocious language as that man uses! Why nothing on earth would make me sit through that picture!"

We all looked around for the man who had been guilty. We had heard no one speak, and, as we looked, saw no one who bore the semblance of guilt. We turned back to the screen and in a flash I understood. The woman who had spoken was a lip reader! What the rest of us had been seeing with only the half intelligence of sight she had taken in with the understanding that was hers through her knowledge of visible speech. We had been held by the work of the star—and good work it was. She had been repelled because of the words the man had allowed to fall from his lips, his careless assurance being that only gestures, positions, and facial expressions could mean anything to a motion picture audience.



"A woman arose, and started out."

A similar instance occurred some time ago when the members of a school for the deaf and dumb were peremptorily taken from a picture house by an attendant, and, thereafter not allowed to attend the performances, the reason given being that the language used by the screen artists was not fit to be—seen. (Sounds funny, doesn't it?)

I hadn't thought much on the subject before, but having it brought thus forcibly to my mind, I began to think about it. One day I called on a producer, recognized as one of the most capable in the profession. I came around to the subject gradually, for I didn't want him to be in any way influenced by views of mine.

"Of course," I said, "when you're taking a scene, you don't pay any attention to what the characters say. It's——" Here I was interrupted:

"Don't I!" this young man exploded. "Don't I! Well, I just guess I do! The people who work for me have parts to learn—just as they would have on the legitimate stage, and until they learn them, the picture doesn't go on."

"But why?" I inquired, innocently. "As long as the acting is good who knows what the people in a moving picture are saying?"

He smiled. "My dear Miss Tinee," he said a trifle wearily. "You must get that little idea out of your head. Perhaps the majority of people who go to see pictures don't understand what is said. But there is a minority that does—and that minority is going to be the majority before much more time elapses. Understanding of visible speech will be practically universal. Mark my words and see if my prediction doesn't come true!"

I believe it will. Investigation proves that interest in this knowledge is steadily increasing. Visible speech, from being taught alone to the deaf and dumb, has been of considerable aid in detective work—and there is no doubt could be made invaluable along this line. Teachers with some understanding of it have found it helpful in controlling incorrigibles in schools for this class. And now comes the motion picture to prove that knowledge of it may be a pleasure and amusement as well as anything else.

Prof. Alexander Melville Bell of Edinburgh, Scotland, father of Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, was the first to reveal visible speech as a possibility. Dr. Bell was born in Edinburgh, March 1, 1819. For twenty-five years he was head of elocution in London. At the age of 23, however, he discovered new facts regarding articulation. When he made his great discovery of visible speech he generously offered to the British government all copyright or claim to what he called the "universal alphabet," and pleaded for authorized investigation, but no attention was paid to his work and he failed to obtain a hearing. However, in 1867 he issued a volume on "The Science of Universal Alphabetics," in which with able pen he pointed out the relationship of visible speech to education and progress. During his life he published forty-eight books and many of them bore on this subject and are now recognized authorities.

There's no doubt but that many of the sensations, acquired apparently through the ear, are the result of vision, and in practically all cases of lip reading are synonymous with mind reading, a lip reader of sixty years' experience asserts, stating as one having authority, that the most successful speech readers are temperamental, belonging to the class of humans who deduce rather than reason. They are also students of human nature, so that, in a way, their minds are prepared for what will come from the lips of the speaker before the actual words are spoken.

If you are seriously rather than frivolously interested in motion pictures—and I think most of you are—and would learn what the men and women of Filmland are saying, here is what you must do:

1. Train your eye to follow the motion of your lips, by standing in front of a mirror and repeating the letters of the alphabet slowly and distinctly. Watch carefully the motion of your lips and the tip of your tongue.

2. Have some one give you the letters of the alphabet without sound or sequence. Write them down on the board as you understand them. When you are wrong study out why you are wrong. Don't allow the person pronouncing to you to contort the face. Have him first give you letters, then words, then sentences.

3. Be sure that your pronunciator does not talk too slowly, as ordinary conversation is fairly brisk and you must accustom yourself to this.

4. Eliminate the blackboard and invest in a second reader. Have some one read to you and see how much you can understand. When you have mastered the second reader try newspapers—then anything, for by this time you'll be fairly proficient. Not more than fifteen minutes at a time should be given to the study of lip reading, as it is hard on the nerves and the eyes, while being mastered. Once mastered, however, those who claim to know say it produces poise and assurance, and a quiet grasp on oneself that could not be obtained in any other way.

5. This done—go to a "movie" show, and see for yourself if the handsome hero exclaims with the death rattle in his throat and his final dying breath:

"For the love of Mike, John, hurry that camera! I've got a date!"

ACCORDING to statistics furnished by himself, Francis X. Bushman of the Metro company was born on the 10th of January, 1885, in Norfolk, Va. He was educated in Amendale college, Maryland, and from there went on the "legitimate" stage, where he played in stock. About five years ago he turned his talents to screen work, joining the Essanay company, with which concern he was affiliated until several months ago when he went to the Metro organization in California. He has brown hair, blue eyes, and is five feet, eleven inches tall. At the time he furnished these statistics his weight was supposed to be 185 pounds. This was a couple of years ago. Mr. Bushman says that he is devoted to athletics, books, and horses. His favorite books are "Cicero on Oratory," Bacon's "Advancement of Learning," and all the dramatists and historians. Far be it from Mr. Bushman to read anything light and fluffy. "Diamond Dick," "Sink or Swim," "Do and Dare" never had any place in his library. Neither does he dance. He is married.

ANSWERS TO MOVIE FANS.

UNIVERSAL FAN: Just to prove that I really do live, breathe, have my being, and did receive your letter—here's answering it. There is no reason why the picture of your favorites should not appear in the Frame of Public Favor providing they receive votes enough. You know it is the readers alone who decide this every Sunday. I have absolutely nothing to say about it. I count the votes and there my responsibility ends. Now do you believe in me?

A. P.: I am sure that if you would address a letter to Edna Maison in care of the Universal company, Universal City, Cal., she would receive it. I understand she is not married. She is in her early twenties and has dark hair and eyes. Miss Maison's picture has appeared in "The Frame of Public Favor." I am sorry you did not see it.

ARTI: Oh, Arti, that would be telling! A number of people called for contest slips "that Saturday." The chances are that "the rather tall young one did see me and as he undoubtedly did see many others it would be impossible to say just which one he thought I was. I think it might be considered a breach of confidence were I to tell you just what it was "Jack" asked me. Who is Francis X. Bushman, you ask me? Ye gods!

EDDIE: The thing for you to do, said she, is to write to Neva Gerber in care of the American Film company, Santa Barbara, Cal., requesting a picture of her and accompanying your request with what is commonly known as two bits.

ABBIE V.: So you think Jim of "His Letters" is James Morrison? Well—? Address Mr. Charles Chaplin in care of the Essanay company, Los Angeles, Cal. It is not so much that I am obliging as that I love to answer your questions.

BLUE EYES AND BROWN EYES: I certainly do appreciate the fact that you love me. Keep right on. In "The Black Box" Frank McQuarrie took the part of Craig, and William Worthington was the professor. King Baggot is married. Marguerite Snow was playing with Francis X. Bushman but recent illness has prevented her being in pictures. I suppose there is no harm in your asking your favorites to send you autographed postals, but I doubt if many of them will do it, unless you inclose the postal with a request for photograph. Remember that in order to receive a photograph it is usually necessary to remit a quarter. Y'wekkum!

ANXIOUS CURLY HEAD: How lovely that you enjoy the Right Off the Reel page and how lovely of you to tell me that you do. In order to remove the anxiety from under those curls let me assure you that I am confident Mr. Coombs would be highly flattered for you to write and tell him how much you appreciate his work. Address him in care of the Kalem company, 235 W. Twenty-third street, New York. Better inclose a stamped self addressed envelope if you wish him to answer your letter.

EVELYN S: Your votes were received and registered. You are at liberty to vote as many times as you wish for the person whose picture you desire to see in "The Frame of Public Favor." The votes are counted each week and destroyed.

ROCKIE: Why in the world did they nick-name you that? Harry Myers was the charming young man who appeared with Rosemary Theby in "Saved by a Dream." Address Miss Theby in care of the Universal company, 1600 Broadway, New York.

VIRGINIA AND MARGARET: Yes, Tom, Owen, and Matt Moore are brothers. Mignon Anderson is in her early twenties. Mr. Chaplin is still sane, it's a wonder.

TESS: My dear child, such persistence will certainly win for you what you wish. No doubt in the world but what the gentleman's picture will succeed in making the Frame if all his admirers are as enthusiastic as you are about collecting votes. I don't want to get rid of you, however, so keep writing even after you have achieved your heart's desire. Yes, Mina Cunard and Grace Cunard are sisters. Mr. Bushman has brown hair and blue eyes. Crane Wilbur has brown hair and gray eyes. You're welcome.

LENA: If you will send a stamped self addressed envelope I will take great pleasure in mailing you the printed material I have on scenario writing and a list of firms that accept scenarios. You refer to the article on how to become a motion picture player. I will inclose that too with pleasure.

OSCAR A. G.: You are entirely wrong in imagining that any preference will be shown to friends of Mr. McCardell when the sequels to "The Diamond from the Sky" are read. For detailed information I think you had better send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope. I have some printed material that will explain clearly everything you wish to know.

MUTUAL MOVIE FAN: Thank you so much for your words of appreciation. It is nice of you to take the time and trouble to tell me that you enjoy the page. In "Runaway June" Marguerite Marsh played the part of Tommy Thomas. I have not the cast of the other play you mention. Awfully sorry.

"His Letters," which are the epistles from a moving picture actor in California to his lawyer friend in Chicago, will appear from time to time on this page. In the intervals will appear various articles of timely interest.

Voice of the Fan

TIRED OF BOBBING UP.

Dear Miss Tinee: I do hope that you will publish this letter, because I want some movie picture pianists to read it. To me it is unpatriotic to hear "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," "Star Spangled Banner," and other patriotic songs without 'rising. But constantly you hear these songs in movie theaters and only one or two out of every audience rises. I think it an outrage to have to keep "bobbin'" up and down. It not only annoys yourself, but your unpatriotic neighbor, and yet you cannot sit down while someone is playing one of your national hymns. It would be disrespectful. I sincerely hope that the playing of patriotic songs in moving picture theaters will be abolished.

PEEVISH PHAN.

THINKS LOVE PLAYS NO GOOD.

Dear Miss Tinee: I want to register a big kick. It is this: You can not go into a movie theater without seeing a "love movie." I am not saying that a good, genuine, wholesome romance is no good, but the flimsy, silly, sentimental plays one nearly always sees are no good. The bee-u-ti-ful heroine with too much lip stick, and whose hair must have been up in terribly tight curl papers for a week, is now getting stale.

A PRACTICAL PERSON.

HELPFUL LEAH!

A press agent in dire need of a story and meeting with the worst luck in the world in his endeavors to obtain one, was about to despair when into his office walked a fair star—Miss Leah Baird by name.

"Did your spirit ever find abode in the body of an animal?" asked the press agent—just like that!

"Oh yes," answered Miss Baird. "I have been a horse, a deer, and in one reincarnation I remember being one of the prehistoric monsters that lived ages and ages ago, partly in the water and partly on land, and, do you know, while I can picture this animal I have never been able to find out its name. There seems to be a lapse of 500 years between each of my reincarnations and during my previous appearances I have lived in every part of the globe, and, of course, been able to converse in the language of the various peoples."

Here the press agent broke in with a question:

"Miss Baird, do animals talk?"

"Certainly, they not only talk but think and love. For instance my bull dog——"

"Oh Miss Baird, before you tell about your dog, which of your reincarnations do you like to remember as giving you the most pleasure?"

"You may not believe it," answered the Vitagraph player, "but the one I remember most distinctly and the one I like best to remember was when my spirit was in the dove of peace that carried the olive branch out of the ark."

The pencil dropped from the nervous fingers of the dazed story writer and he sank back in the chair completely overcome.

The FLIGHTS of FRANCOIS by VICTOR ROUSSEAU

THE PHANTOM CITY

Englishmen Are Such Heartless Beings!—They Can See Their London Destroyed by Zeppelins Before Their Indifferent Eyes.

I HAVE seen many terrible sights in war, but as long as I live I shall never forget the scene presented by the destruction of London, when the great Zeppelin fleet sailed forth upon its mission of ruin and destruction and accomplished it. What! you exclaim. London devastated by aerial bombs and the world none the wiser? How could the great commercial capital of the world undergo such devastation and the news be kept concealed? How could a city of eight millions be blotted out and no one know? Furthermore, even supposing that the islanders could keep secret the story of their humiliation, why did not Germany announce proudly to the world the result of her successful foray?

I, François L'Anglois, am one of the only two who saw the spectacle of London's obliteration in its entirety. The other was Capt. Anstruther. And herewith I set forth the narration for the benefit of posterity.

I have never loved thee, London, home of an inglorious and commercial race, though the fortunes of war have compelled us Frenchmen to come to the English aid against the enemy who planned to subjugate the storm-swept islands which send us coal, boule-dogues, long teeth, 5 o'clock tea, and sport.

But, you interrupt again, can it be possible that London was really destroyed and that you were a witness of it?

Yes, my friend, I answer. And it happened in this way:

The corps of aviation volunteers, in which I was serving France, was posted on the extreme left of the allied forces, among the Belgian marshes. In those terrible days a fresh drive of the German against Paris seemed inevitable. There was none of us who, witnessing the perpetual onslaught against our forces, did not secretly despair of coping with those masses of men that seemed to spring from the ground, a locust army whose numbers never decreased, whose violence never abated.

It was little we thought of London then, and so you may judge of my chagrin when I was summoned to the headquarters of Gen. d'Amade, commanding our left wing, and ordered to prepare to undertake a mission in favor of England.

I found the general in his hut with two men. One was an operator from the wireless section of the intelligence department; the other a short, stocky islander—Capt. Anstruther of the British aerial corps, but detached to serve upon the general's staff.

"Capt. Anstruther," said Gen. d'Amade, "this is the man L'Anglois, of whom I spoke to you. He has been specially recommended as a man of intrepidity and resourcefulness."

I smiled at the description. "Alas, no, mon général," I answered. "I am an ordinary man, that is to say, a Frenchman, and no braver than men of other nations, but, among my own comrades, a coward, except when the thrill of some overwhelming emotion——"

He cut me short with a frown. He was not at all impressed by my self-depreciation. And it is a strange thing, but as this war has progressed I have perceived a peculiar psychological change in the nature of the Frenchman. He delights no longer in those inspiring phrases with which he once consoled himself for defeat and encouraged and inspired himself to victory. We have patterned ourselves after the English fashion. We are curt, abrupt, taciturn. Seeing the general frown, with a natural tactfulness I fell into silence.

"L'Anglois," he said, "I am going to intrust you with a mission of the highest responsibility, in which you will act as pilot to Capt. Anstruther. He is unacquainted with the biplane, and will therefore accompany you as a passenger only. I may say that Gen. French has not been convinced as to the urgency of this matter, and hence you will receive no assistance from the British aviation corps."

"In plain words, sir," said Capt. Anstruther, in execrable French, "our headquarters does not consider this danger to exist."

"Precisely," answered Gen. d'Amade. "But as a matter of courtesy to your allies you are willing to make the attempt to save your capital from destruction."

I trembled at the sarcasm, thrust home with all the verve of a Frenchman. Would not a duel follow? No. The Englishman merely answered "Exactly," and lapsed into silence.

Gen. d'Amade turned to me with a shrug of his shoulders. "L'Anglois," he said, "a wireless communication from the headquarters of the German staff has been intercepted at the Eiffel tower, stating that a fleet of twenty Zeppelins is being assembled near Zeebrugge and is on the point of sailing to bombard London."

"That is excellent news, mon général," I returned.

"What do you mean?" he demanded, and I saw Capt. Anstruther turn and look at me inquiringly.

"Because," I answered bluntly, "it is impossible to bombard London and Paris at the same time. It gives us a breathing space in which to collect ourselves while the Hun and the Longtooth mutually destroy each other. It fortifies us with equanimity, it inspires——"

"Be silent!" shouted D'Amade. "I am sorry, Captain," he said, "that this buffoon should have been sent here."

"O, I like this chap," drawled Anstruther. "I'd as soon take him as any one."

Gen. d'Amade turned to me again. I think he remembered that we of the volunteer aviation corps, though not officers, are neither private soldiers, and that he had trespassed upon the courtesy which is the fine flower of French civilization. At any rate, there was an undertone of apology in his next words.

"L'Anglois, the situation demands immediate action," he continued. "We have communicated with the British authorities, but unfortunately our statement has made little impression upon them."

He shot a glance at Anstruther, who merely bowed his head and murmured "Exactly."

"If Britain cares nothing for the safety of her capital, at least we shall do all in our power to save her," resumed D'Amade. "Apparently she relies upon her warships in the North sea to check such a raid with their high angle guns and hydroplanes."

He was, of course, talking in reality to the captain. A general is not so explicit in his conversation with a mere aviator.

"That reason would be sound enough if the Zeppelins were likely to traverse the North sea. But that is where the English miscalculate. They are to cross from Zeebrugge to the Kentish coast, where they will proceed northward, skirting the land, until the Thames estuary is reached. Thus they hope to avoid both the searchlights, the hydroplanes, and the high angle guns that they would encounter along any of the direct routes. Each Zeppelin is equipped with five tons of dynamite projectiles. Imagine the effect of a hundred tons of dynamite dropped from a height of a mile over the heart of London! The city will be wiped off the map, and the conflagration that will ensue will devastate the entire south of England. It will be the worst holocaust in history. Your task, then is to accompany Capt. Anstruther to Chatham, where a communication from Gen. Joffre will be handed to the military commandant, impressing upon him the significance of this raid."

He addressed the captain again. "I am aware, sir," he said, "that it seems superfluous for France to spend her energies upon the purpose of impressing England with the significance of an undertaking which Gen. French refuses to consider of importance, but at least it shall never be said that France failed in her duty to her ally in arms."

"By Jove! no, general," answered the Englishman.

Less than an hour later, with my tank full of essence, I piloted Capt. Anstruther across our lines in the direction of Dunkirk. It was not long before we perceived, in the fading light, a thin white bar, like a wire of drawn silver, underneath us—the sea.

The Englishman began to interest me. During the journey he had hardly spoken a word. He greeted my remarks in half contemptuous, half uninterested indifference. I tried him on history and philosophy, I touched upon esthetics, ethnology; I swung the pendulum from grave to gay. In vain. I drew nothing from him, and I even fancied that I detected an intonation of contempt in the curt monosyllables that rewarded my enterprise. Name of a dog, could nothing move these islanders? He had placed not the least credence in the statements of Gen. d'Amade, and he had consented to accompany me only as a courtesy to France.

We should soon know the truth. Calais lay to our left, Dunkirk on the right hand. I turned eastward, dipping the aileron as a gusty wind caught us and set the struts of the outrigger groaning. Darkness came on swiftly, but no lights twinkled from any village or farm. Everywhere were signs of ruin and devastation. I flew lower toward Zeebrugge, scanning the country carefully. The rising moon showed me the deserted, roofless villages beneath, little more than rubbish heaps in the abandoned fields. I began to think that the story might have been nothing but a hoax. I turned to look at Anstruther. He was watching me imperturbably, the flicker of a smile upon his face. "Go on," he said. I followed the line of coast, flying a little way inland, over the cast sand dunes. We avoided Dunkirk by flying out to sea; then I turned inward and continued over the barren sand.

Suddenly, across the dunes, a finger beam of light shot upward. It came from a German encampment, and the noise of my rackety old motor must have betrayed us. I shut off immediately and glided toward the ground, like a bat descending. The searchlight swept the air behind us impotently. We had touched earth as lightly as a feather and, hidden among the dunes, we heard the clatter of the taube engines as the aeroplanes flew overhead seeking us, their searchlights sweeping the heavens. They vanished into the distance.

Capt. Anstruther seated himself upon the top of a dune and crossed his legs. "I say! I'm quite at your disposal, you know," he remarked. "Is it your plan to stay here some time or to start for Chatham?"

Singular man, to fall into polite irony when the metropolis of his nation was menaced with destruction! Before I could reply there came a singular obscuration of the moon, as if an unheralded eclipse had suddenly begun. A moment later I perceived the moon's edge behind a dark, oval body that was traversing the orb. It was a Zeppelin. Then, as I watched, I saw Zeppelin after Zeppelin wing its path across the skies. The dark bodies were just discernible, and then only because the sound of the propellers directed my attention toward the quarter of the sky in which they floated.

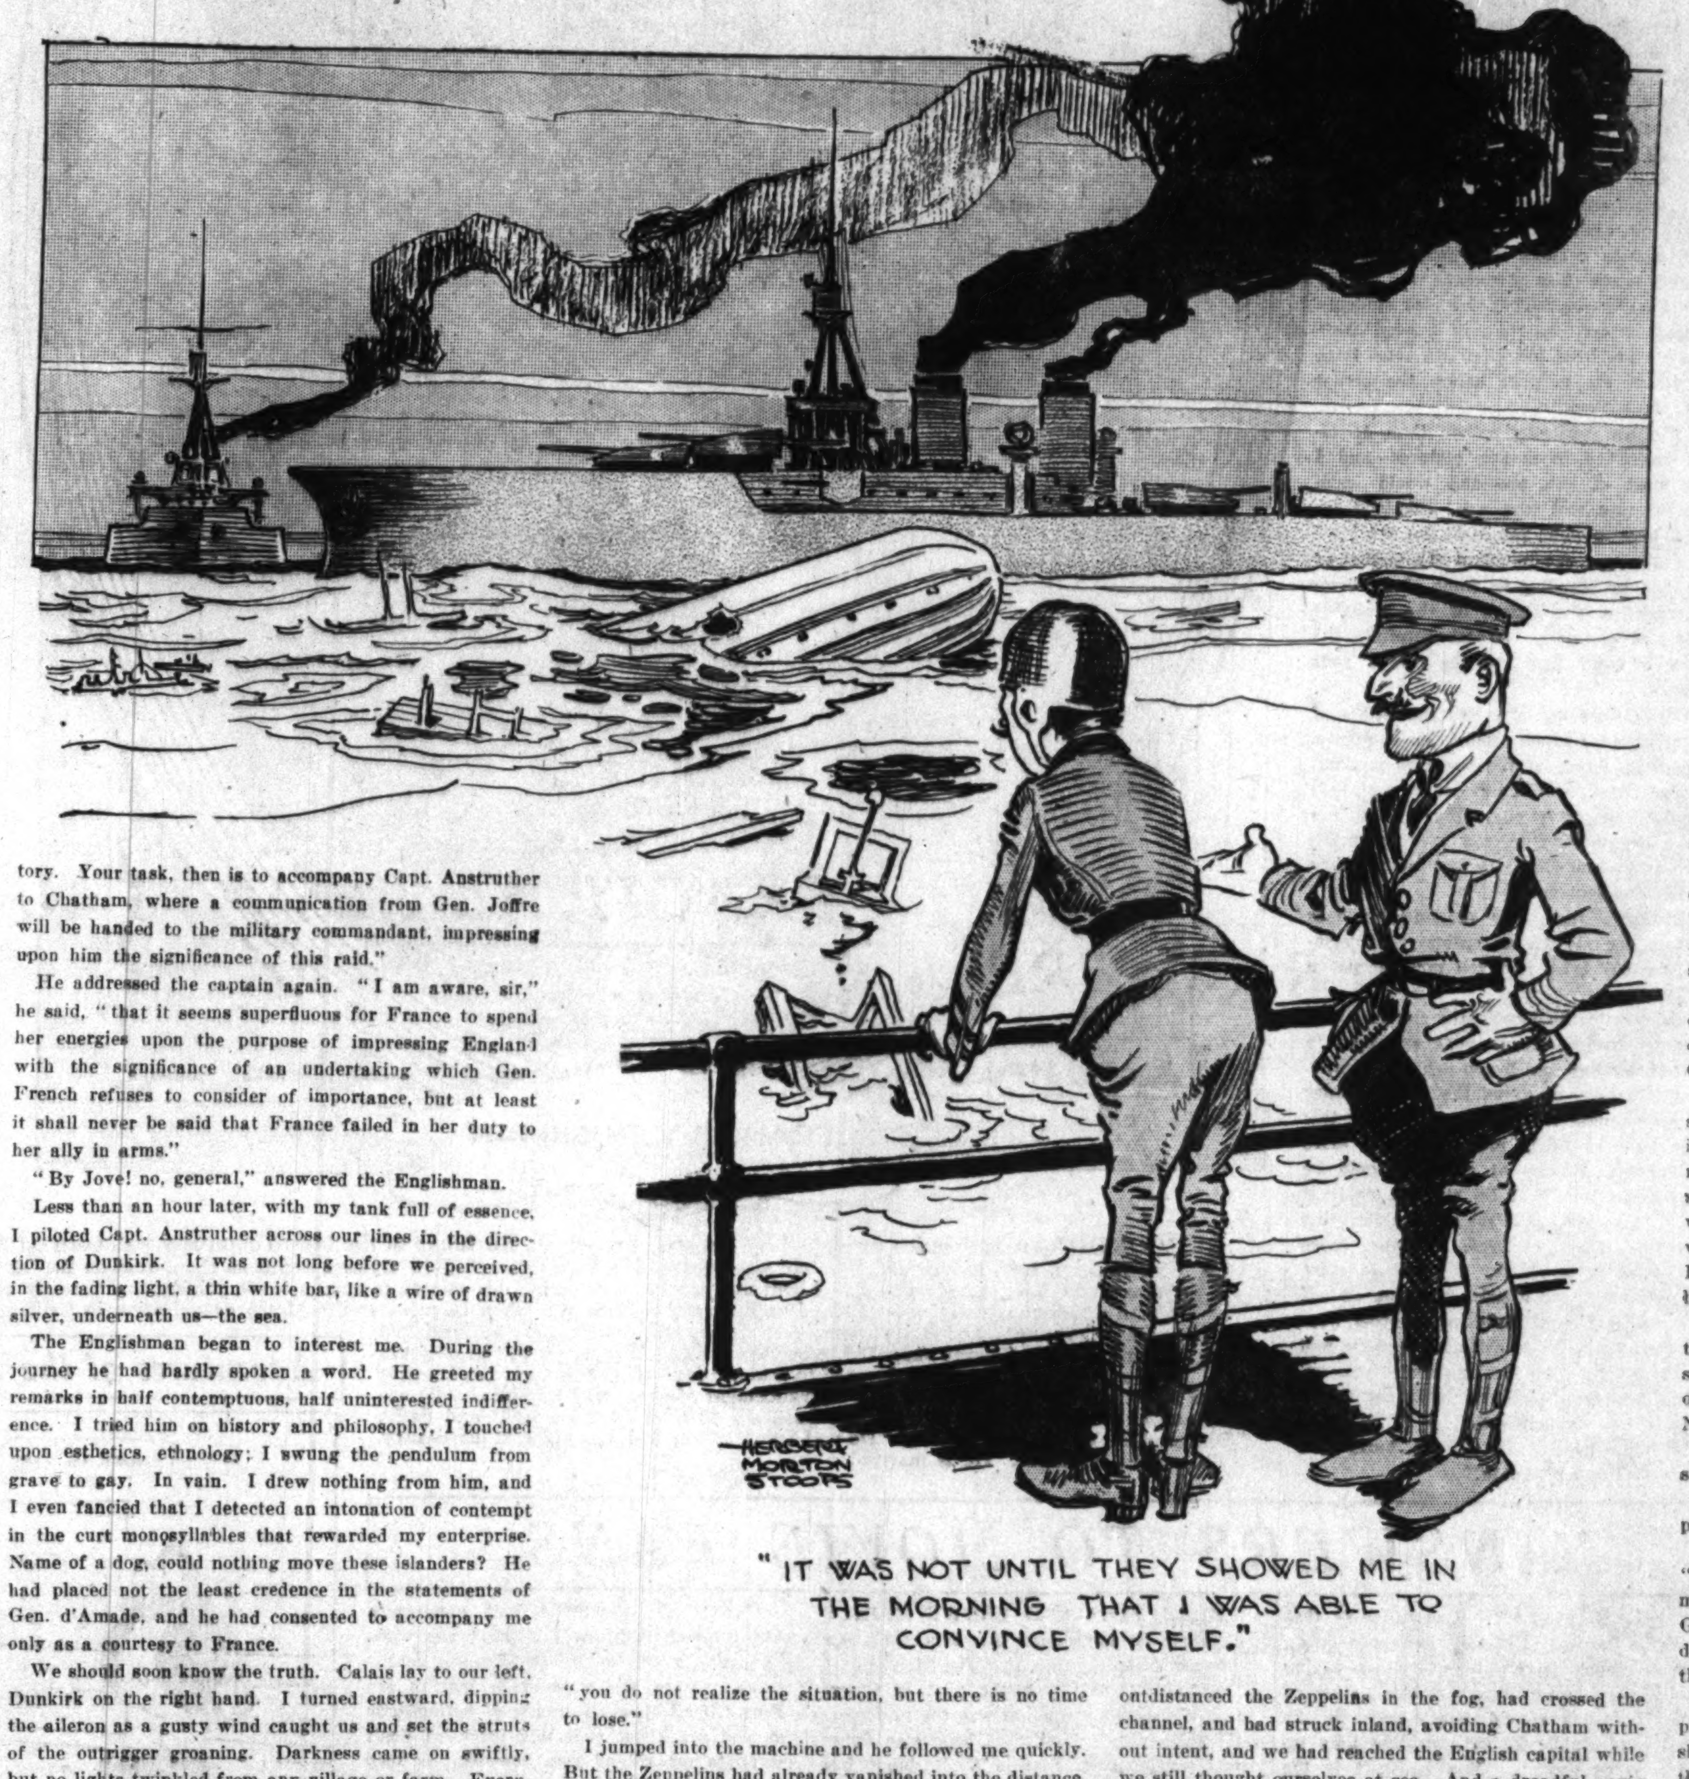
"Eh bien, monsieur le capitaine, there are your Zeppelins!" I said. I think there was triumph in my tone; I did not attempt to disguise it. But the captain was not stirred to the least sign of anger.

"I say, that's jolly interesting," he drawled. "So we are really starting for Chatham?"

"Yes, captain, and we must make our way fast," I answered, "if we are to outdistance them."

I wondered whether he understood the desperate nature of our undertaking. Not only must we outdistance those giant gas bags but we must evade the whole score of them, each armed, in addition to its dynamite bombs, with quick firers, a single shot from which, well directed, would send us into the sea.

My mission had all but failed. But a Frenchman only begins to rejoice when the case is desperate. I grasped the captain by the arm. "Come, monsieur," I said; "you do not realize the situation, but there is no time to lose."



"IT WAS NOT UNTIL THEY SHOWED ME IN THE MORNING THAT I WAS ABLE TO CONVINCE MYSELF."

I jumped into the machine and he followed me quickly. But the Zeppelins had already vanished into the distance, and with only my compass and the circuitous route that was to be taken, I had little hope of either finding or anticipating them. We rose. The rattle of the motor was the only sound in the vast silence. Under me the sea lay, level and black; above were the stars.

The gale increased, so that our progress was rendered slow and difficult in the extreme. We dipped and plunged and floundered in unexpected air pockets. In vain I banked, for the full sweep of the wind filled all air levels up to the point where the rarefaction of the atmosphere made the motor miss fire and retarded progress almost to the stopping point. A fog came creeping up, blotting out the stars one by one and converting the moon to a pale, ghostlike haze in the clouds. We were lost hopelessly somewhere between the channel and the North sea.

I set my course northwest, seeing neither sea nor stars in the fog that had blotted out everything. Capt. Anstruther sat immovable beside me. He never spoke, and I did not know whether at last he realized our peril, whether he knew that we were lost and in danger of descending into the sea when the supply of essence became exhausted. So we went on.

And thus we came suddenly upon London!

At first it was only a blur of fog haloed light in the distance beneath us. Then the lights spread out, diffused, and took the form of winking signs, such as are placed high above the roof tops along the Strand and Piccadilly and the Haymarket. They glowed and glittered like an array of jewels beneath where London went about its nocturnal amusements as quietly as though there were no Zeppelins upon their way to work destruction.

I had not thought that we had gone so far. We had outdistanced the Zeppelins in the fog, had crossed the channel, and had struck inland, avoiding Chatham without intent, and we had reached the English capital while we still thought ourselves at sea. And a dreadful panic took possession of me as, looking down, I realized that within half an hour, perhaps, this hive of industry and peace would be at the mercy of the aerial horde that followed. My heart went out to London, as if it had been a sister city to my beloved Paris.

The fog had thinned slightly. I dipped, flying now perhaps seven hundred feet above the great metropolis. The winking signs leered up at us. What an irony that all the world's center—Paris excepted—all the heart of northern civilization should be represented by this congeries of advertisement!

I did not know what to do. I looked at Capt. Anstruther, but he sat motionless at my side, the flicker of a smile again upon his face. Rage against him filled my heart. They talk of the sang froid of the English, but, name of a pig, it was for him and his nation that I had risked my life in the gale! Was it nothing to him? Was he still carrying out his bluff of unbelief, or did he not care? I did not know what to do. How could I bring my biplane to earth when all the guns of London would be trained on me as soon as I was picked up by those searchlights that went wavering to and fro about me?

I think I must have lost my presence of mind, for I flew to and fro above the capital in desperation, looking down in fascination upon the lights. I saw a huge advertisement of pills come out, letter by letter, and disappear. Who but the English would advertise their pills—pills, at such a time of war, when the thoughts should soar upon heroism and destiny? I saw the names of theaters burning with steady radiance. Here was "The Merchant of Venice" advertised, and there, not six feet from it, "Arms and the Man." Here was a legend "soothing sirup" that flamed out, letter by letter, and vanished again.

Now I was immediately above the heart of the illuminated center of London. I could begin to trace the outlines of the lit streets beneath me. Here must be Piccadilly, with the pin pricks of light in the mists. Here was Piccadilly Circus; there the Trocadero restaurant. The black gap, with the emblazonment of a hotel at one corner, must be Trafalgar square.

I was trying to bring my quivering nerves to steadiness to decide upon my action, whatever it might be, when, out of the mist, I heard the whir of a propeller, and suddenly a black elliptical shadow shot past beneath me.

A Zeppelin! And indeed I had not underestimated my courage to Gen. d'Amade, for I had not known the limits of fear until that moment as, like a frantic bird, I beat my way up where the cloud wrack drifted over the zone of clearer air. And yet, strangely enough, my fear was for the city more than for my life. As the great, gray, phantom-like body skimmed past, so near that I could have flung a bomb into it, I pressed so hard upon the lifting lever that the biplane almost overset. Capt. Anstruther's body shot against mine.

"I say, old chap, you're not going to tip us out, are you?" he asked.

He was almost laughing now and I could no longer restrain my rage.

"Is it nothing to you that your great capital will be blown to atoms within five minutes?" I cried. "May London perish, if she contains men like you, men who live, not for honor or glory, but for pills, pills—and soothing sirup!"

"I say, you know, suppose we wait till it happens, eh, L'Anglois?" he rejoined more seriously.

Out of the fog the other Zeppelins floated into view and were lost in the washing mists. One by one they glided under me, not noticing the racket of my wheezing motor as I fluttered above them. Perhaps they thought I was attached to their side, or would not waste the time to fight me in the fog. So I flew to and fro, helpless, staring in horrified dismay at the blurred lights underneath.

Suddenly the moon burst forth triumphantly from a cloud. The mists thinned. Now I saw all the Zeppelins, clustering perhaps five hundred feet beneath me, forming a constellation in the sky. They had massed for battle, and they went sailing slowly against the doomed city. They meant to drop their bombs simultaneously over each area marked for destruction. And still I climbed into the cold, my only thought—I confess it—to see once more the soil of my beloved France.

I heard a muffled report, a roar increasing into a horrible crescendo as the sound waves mounted, and then, with a pandemonium of noise that resembled the raging of big guns in battle, the work of ruin began. The biplane, high as she was above the Zeppelins, rocked upon the waves of the explosions. Underneath, the balloons circled slowly, like monster eagles, dropping their dynamite bombs.

The rift in the fog widened. The lights of London shone out clear beneath us. Clouds of black, treacly smoke coiled over them, concealing and again disclosing them. Then, one by one, they vanished. The work of destruction was already accomplished.

As I sat, sick and numb, beside the motor, Capt. Anstruther reached out his hand and took control of the steering gear.

"Excuse me, old chap," he said, as he sent the machine swooping into the distance. "It's best to get out of the danger zone. There's something more coming. Got control? Steady, now——"

Even as he spoke I heard the shriek of a hundred shells among the Zeppelins, followed by the slow moving booming of each discharge. Then flashes of light rent the fog everywhere. Over us the moon and stars shone in the inky sky. Under us was the gray sea. And where the German war balloons had coursed in triumph was wreckage, falling from the heavens toward the English battleships, tiny black flecks upon the ocean's breast.

I saw the mighty Zeppelins plunge to their destruction in the bosom of the waters. And still the shells shrieked and the thunders pealed, and all that remained of the great air armada went to its eternal rest in the North sea.

"What's the matter, L'Anglois?" inquired Capt. Anstruther. "Looking for London, eh?"

I nodded, too sick and stunned to blurt out my surprise.

"I suppose I should have let you in," said the captain, "but strict orders, you know. I positively had to give my word that no inkling of this should leak out, even to Gen. d'Amade. Decent fellow he is! It hurt me to deceive him. But let's go down and have a look at the fun."

He laid his hand on mine and I sent the biplane volplaning seaward. The water was covered with battleships. I saw beneath me the grand fleet of England—the mightiest squadron of war vessels ever assembled, which had lain hidden, none knew where, since the outbreak of the war.

Anstruther, though he had never steered a biplane before, guided the machine with infinite skill until we came to rest on the stripped deck of a British dreadnaught.

Yes, it required two bottles of good wine in the mess before I recovered the use of my wits. And it was not until they showed me the wrecked rafts next morning that I was able to convince myself.

"You see, L'Anglois," explained the captain, whose taciturnity had vanished, "our intelligence department knew all about the intended coup. But we had to keep our plans absolutely secret. Sorry to have seemed churlish to you chaps, but I didn't dare let you or D'Amade in on it.

"We knew the Germans would try it in a fog, and that they couldn't be sure of their bearings because, even if the weather had been fairly clear, the lights would have dazzled their eyes. Well, weren't you deceived yourself, L'Anglois?

"Anybody seeing those lights from a height would have thought that he was looking down on the roof tops of London, instead of upon a string of electric signs, laid out on rafts, plumb on the breast of the North sea, with our battleships lying close by, all ready. I bet there won't be any more air raids upon London soon—what?"

"Hardly, monsieur le capitaine," I answered gayly, "for the destruction of your city was really complete. But it was lucky that you had the Teutons for your enemies."

"Instead of you mounseers, you mean, what?" he said, after a moment's thought. "Yes? Exactly."

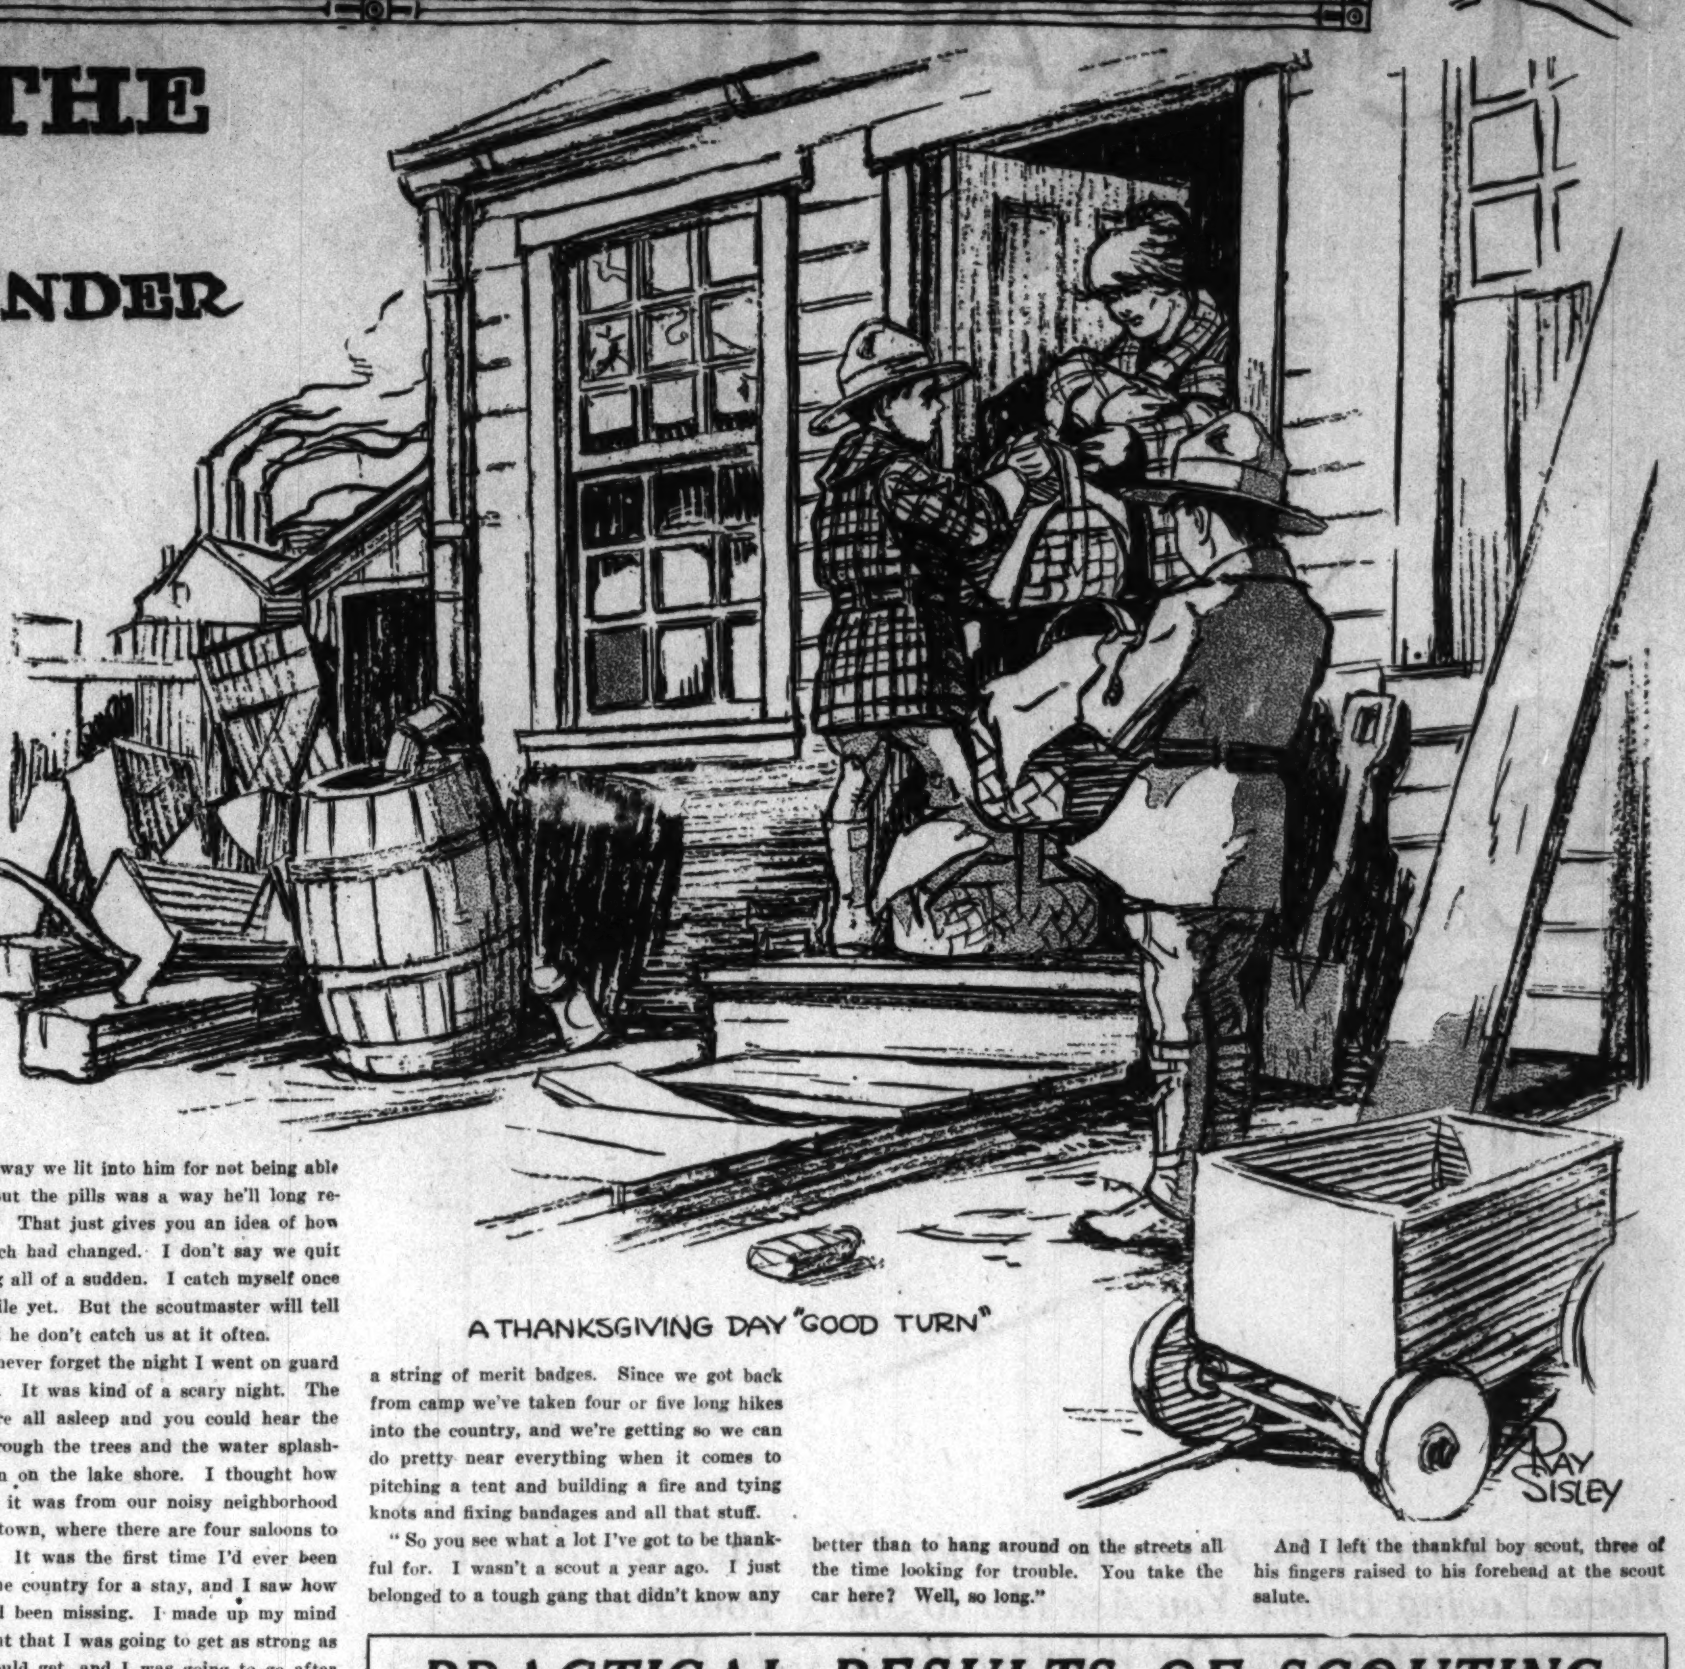
THE TRAIL OF THE BOY SCOUTS

by PATHFINDER



A THANKSGIVING DAY "GOOD TURN"

A THANKSFUL SCOUT.

I ALWAYS feel acquainted when I meet a scout on the street, even though we have never been introduced. The fact that a boy is wearing the regulation khaki uniform is enough introduction for me. I simply offer the greeting "What troop?" and the scout always answers with a smile and a tone of pride, and there you are—we are acquainted.

It was in this manner that I made the acquaintance of a typical boy scout the other day. Somehow we got to talking about various scout activities, and the conversation led up to Thanksgiving day plans. Now, having attended scout camps, I am familiar with the boy scout appetite, and I know how thoroughly he can do justice to turkey and cranberry sauce and mince pie. The meal that you cook at a roadside campfire on a hike may taste better than home cooking at times, but it takes a fellow's mother to get up a real Thanksgiving dinner.

"Our troop has planned some Thanksgiving day good turns," informed my new acquaintance. "We're going to take the money that we got from our entertainment last month and buy some turkeys and stuff and put it in baskets and leave them on the doorsteps of some folks we figure ain't going to have much of a spread. Gee, when I think of it, I've got enough to be thankful for."

"Yes?" I said, encouraging him along.

"You see," he continued, "a year ago now I wasn't a scout. I wasn't anything like a scout. I was a knocker on 'em. Why, when the scoutmaster first started a troop down in our neighborhood I called all the kids that joined 'sissies.'

"You know how tough our part of town is, and I was one of the toughest kids in the bunch, too, believe me. There wasn't any place to play except on the streets, and we had a gang that smoked cigarets and stole from the fruit stands and had the cops chasing us all the time. I don't know how the scoutmaster got Benny Rossman into the new troop, but anyhow when we started to kidding Benny he said it was all right and we didn't know anything about it. Finally Benny got some of the rest of us to go over one night when they was making plans to camp out in the country. Say, this scoutmaster was a real guy. He didn't preach to us or nothing, but spent all the time telling how the bunch would have to wise up if they didn't want to be made to look like boobs along with the other scouts out there at camp.

"It was that camp stuff that got me. But I didn't take the scout oath without thinking over what I was promising. When I got home that night and my old man found out I'd joined the scouts he wanted to know what kind of a thing it was. And before I knew it I was up and bragging and boosting for it stronger than any scout you ever heard. From then on it didn't seem to me that the scout meetings came often enough, and between meetings we got to studying the handbook and practicing first aid and scraping together money for our uniforms.

"But talk about tenderfeet! Say, what we didn't know about scouting when we got at camp would fill ten handbooks. Along with the rest of the troop, our patrol was a fright. Benny Rossman was our patrol leader and I was his assistant, and we kept after those kids to try to keep them from showing their ignorance. There wasn't a one of 'em that could swim a stroke, in the first place, and the way they shivered around in the shallow water was enough to make you sick—that is, when we first got to camp. But along about the third day we was beginning to make a showing. We'd begun to take on a little sunburn and we was getting used to hearing the crickets sing and to know a maple leaf from a sunflower.

"It may sound funny, but you'd ought to've heard the joshing we give Louie Sorenti the night he tried to roll a cigaret on the sly. Louie didn't have any too much lungs to boast of anyhow, he'd whimpered the afternoon before because the hike was too long for him, and the way we lit into him for not being able to cut out the pills was a way he'll long remember. That just gives you an idea of how our bunch had changed. I don't say we quit swearing all of a sudden. I catch myself once in a while yet. But the scoutmaster will tell you that he don't catch us at it often.

"I'll never forget the night I went on guard at camp. It was kind of a scary night. The kids were all asleep and you could hear the wind through the trees and the water splashing down on the lake shore. I thought how different it was from our noisy neighborhood back in town, where there are four saloons to a block. It was the first time I'd ever been out in the country for a stay, and I saw how much I'd been missing. I made up my mind that night that I was going to get as strong as a guy could get, and I was going to go after a string of merit badges. Since we got back from camp we've taken four or five long hikes into the country, and we're getting so we can do pretty near everything when it comes to pitching a tent and building a fire and tying knots and fixing bandages and all that stuff.

"So you see what a lot I've got to be thankful for. I wasn't a scout a year ago. I just belonged to a tough gang that didn't know any better than to hang around on the streets all the time looking for trouble. You take the car here? Well, so long."

And I left the thankful boy scout, three of his fingers raised to his forehead at the scout salute.

SCOUT NOTES FROM EVERYWHERE.

BECAUSE he had learned the methods of first aid and because he did not lose his presence of mind a Portland, Me., scout, whose name could not be learned, saved a 10 year old boy, Robert Wilcox, from bleeding to death. Robert received an ugly gash on his arm from a fall on an open jackknife. The scout removed the lad's garter and tied it tightly above the cut.

Scout Williford of Troop 4, Memphis, Tenn., while delivering groceries, noticed the shingle roof of a home burning. He immediately notified the occupants and called the fire department. Due to the scout's prompt work the damage done was slight.

* *

A. Alberti De Frank, an Oneida Indian, has organized a troop of scouts at the Onondaga Indian reservation in New York state.

The scouts of Allentown, Pa., recently gave a play entitled "The Boy Scout," which netted them $38.50. Last summer these Allentown scouts hiked from their camp to Valley Forge, a distance of fifty miles.

In Sweden it is becoming more and more the custom to have new troops presented with their official charter and the scouts with their tenderfoot pins at a special service in the church with which the troop is connected. This ceremony takes place in the presence of parents and friends, and is featured by an appropriate address on "Scouting and Service." Another innovation in Sweden is the granting by the national scout association, through the local troop, of a special badge of honor or merit to men or women who have performed some unusually big service or who are making a name for themselves in science, literature, art, music, etc. The badge is presented at some big function. This plan serves the double purpose of keeping the boy scouts informed regarding national development and of increasing the interest in scouting on the part of those persons honored. These people as a rule have much influence with the general public, and their friendship for the boy scouts helps to extend the good will toward the organization.

PRACTICAL RESULTS OF SCOUTING.

NO document of greater human interest has ever come to the national headquarters of the boy scout movement (where so many human documents are received) than the report recently sent by the chief of police of Wagoner, Okla., formerly known throughout the southwest as "the toughest city in Oklahoma."

This police chief, H. H. Townsend, discovered, as he says, "that the boy was about the only thing that the business men, the club women, the churches, the schools, and society in general cared nothing about and did nothing for." The conditions were bad for boy life—there were dives in every block, petty crimes were daily occurrences, and seven murders were committed within seven weeks. The big problem before him, the police chief attacked through the boys. He found they were gripped by the idea of being "scouts"—that the scout program proved more fascinating to them than the lives they were leading; two gangs of toughs, known as "The Dirty Dozen" and "The Silent Six," both engaged in careers of crime, were wholly redeemed.

Here are some of the ways in which the "police problem" of that city was worked out successfully:

Wagoner has a patrol of mounted scouts, which distinguished itself recently by finding, in the dead of night, a boy who had been lost on the prairie.

A scout court has been formed which does work similar to that of the Juvenile court in other cities. The scout police report minor misdemeanors, and the offenders are given a regular trial. The more serious cases are turned over to the city and county authorities. Four of the scouts have been granted commissions as deputy sheriffs, and the scout court on several occasions has even tried men for minor offenses.

There is a scout bank, with a capital stock of $100, which is in successful operation and paying semi-annual dividends.

A complete city government has been organized within the troop with mayor, chief of police, and other officers.

A gymnasium, with complete apparatus for physical development, has been fitted up.

An industrial training department in which the boys are taught woodworking, ironworking, and the principles of electricity is in operation.

The scouts are completely equipped for baseball, football, and other sports, and even have their own athletic field and grandstand.

An employment bureau is maintained by means of which scouts can be obtained at a moment's notice for almost any kind of work.

After his thorough experience with the enterprise, Mr. Townsend writes: "I believe the boy scout movement, in time, will reestablish the old reliable type of manhood in our nation, and it is my earnest desire to help the boys overcome some of the difficulties that this present day, thoughtless, money seeking generation has placed in their way."

A FEAT WITH FISH.

THE feat of freezing live fish and reviving them several weeks or months later has been achieved by the Swiss scientist, M. Pictet. The scientist put twenty-eight live fish in a box that contained water rich in oxygen, in which several pieces of ice floated. The temperature of the water was then reduced slowly until it froze. At the end of about two months the cake was gradually thawed and the fish, it is said, were found alive.

In such an experiment, the scientist reports, it is essential that the water be gradually frozen and that it shall have contained pieces of ice for from fifteen to eighteen hours before the whole mass is frozen. The process of thawing must also be slow.

Through this process it is believed that Siberian sturgeon and Alaskan salmon can be exported alive to distant markets.

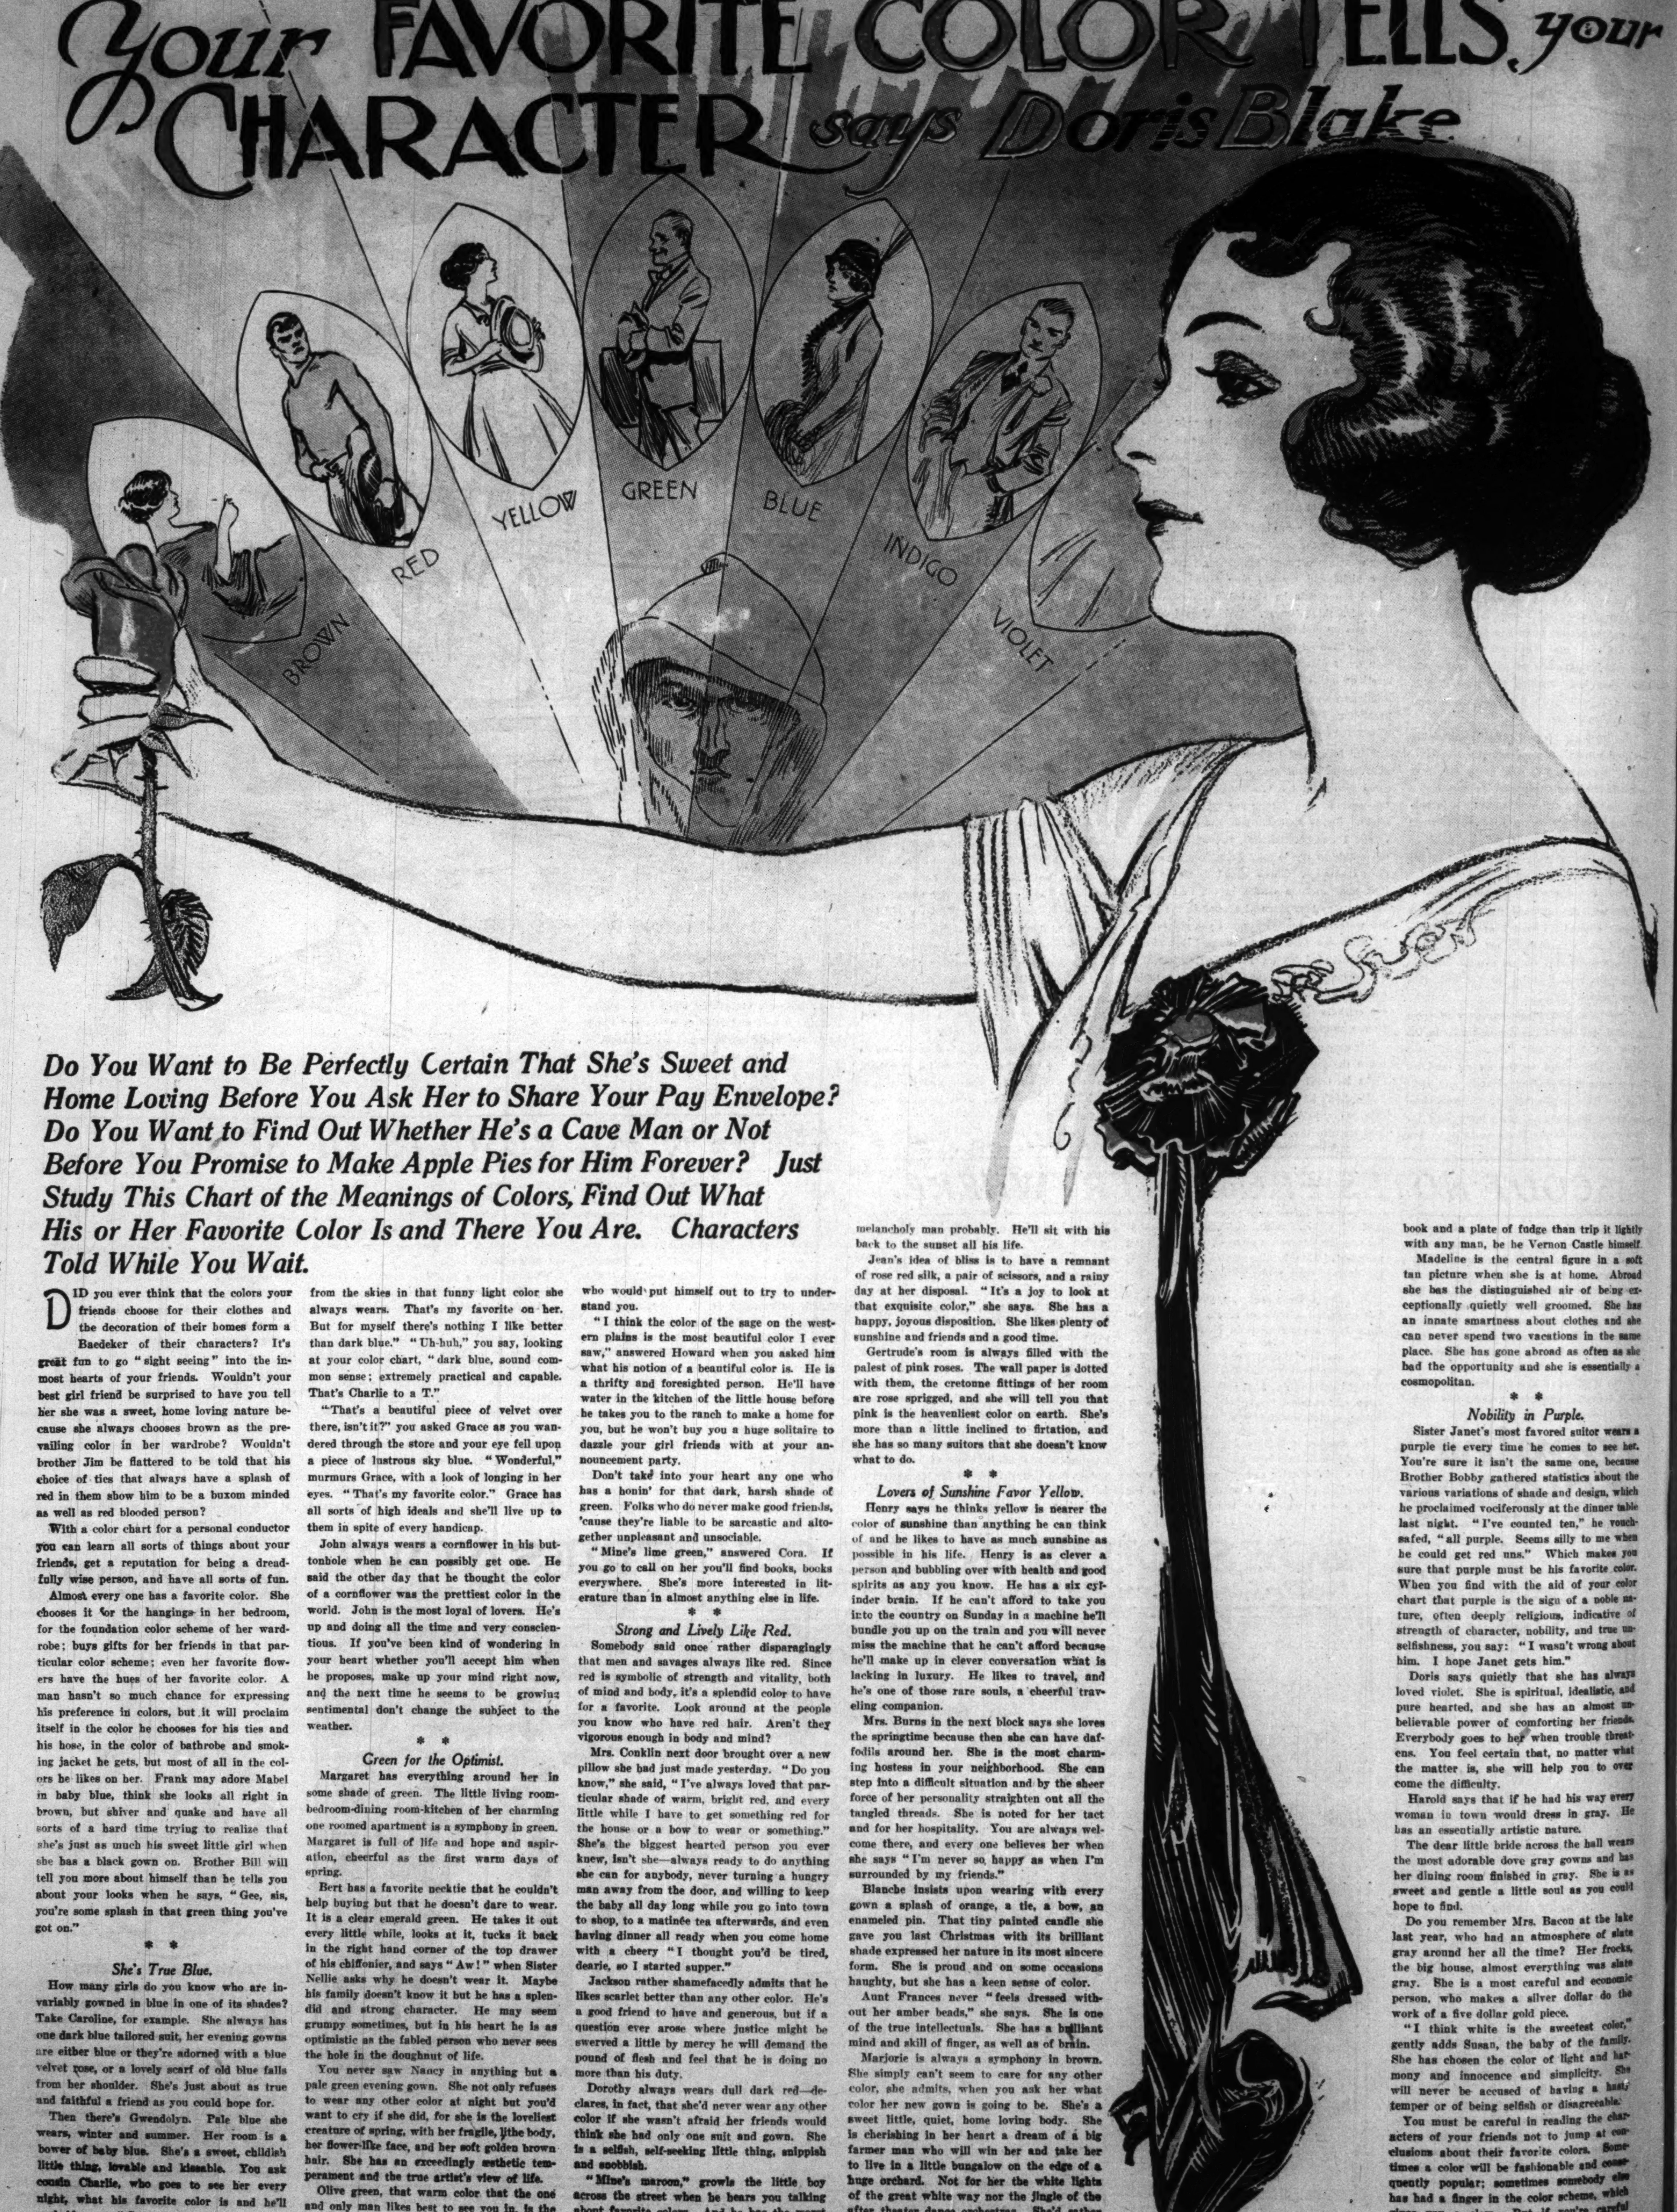
ABRAHAM SLATIS

AN ARTIST WITH JEWELRY.

ABRAHAM SLATIS has furnished an example of what a boy can accomplish during his spare hours. He executed the platinum mounting on the ring shown in the photograph at times when his regular work as a jeweler for a Chicago firm was over. This particular mounting is said to be worth $300. The design shown was pierced out with a saw. It is but one of a number of similar mountings made by the youth. Abraham was born in Russia, but immigrated to Brazil with his parents four years ago. He did not stay in South America long, believing the United States offered better opportunities.

Your FAVORITE COLOR TELLS your CHARACTER says Doris Blake



Do You Want to Be Perfectly Certain That She's Sweet and Home Loving Before You Ask Her to Share Your Pay Envelope? Do You Want to Find Out Whether He's a Cave Man or Not Before You Promise to Make Apple Pies for Him Forever? Just Study This Chart of the Meanings of Colors, Find Out What His or Her Favorite Color Is and There You Are. Characters Told While You Wait.

DID you ever think that the colors your friends choose for their clothes and the decoration of their homes form a Baedeker of their characters? It's great fun to go "sight seeing" into the inmost hearts of your friends. Wouldn't your best girl friend be surprised to have you tell her she was a sweet, home loving nature because she always chooses brown as the prevailing color in her wardrobe? Wouldn't brother Jim be flattered to be told that his choice of ties that always have a splash of red in them show him to be a buxom minded as well as red blooded person?

With a color chart for a personal conductor you can learn all sorts of things about your friends, get a reputation for being a dreadfully wise person, and have all sorts of fun.

Almost every one has a favorite color. She chooses it for the hangings in her bedroom, for the foundation color scheme of her wardrobe; buys gifts for her friends in that particular color scheme; even her favorite flowers have the hues of her favorite color. A man hasn't so much chance for expressing his preference in colors, but it will proclaim itself in the color he chooses for his ties and his hose, in the color of bathrobe and smoking jacket he gets, but most of all in the colors he likes on her. Frank may adore Mabel in baby blue, think she looks all right in brown, but shiver and quake and have all sorts of a hard time trying to realize that she's just as much his sweet little girl when she has a black gown on. Brother Bill will tell you more about himself than he tells you about your looks when he says, "Gee, sis, you're some splash in that green thing you've got on."

She's True Blue.

How many girls do you know who are invariably gowned in blue in one of its shades? Take Caroline, for example. She always has one dark blue tailored suit, her evening gowns are either blue or they're adorned with a blue velvet rose, or a lovely scarf of old blue falls from her shoulder. She's just about as true and faithful a friend as you could hope for.

Then there's Gwendolyn. Pale blue she wears, winter and summer. Her room is a bower of baby blue. She's a sweet, childish little thing, lovable and kissable. You ask cousin Charlie, who goes to see her every night, what his favorite color is and he'll probably say, "Gwen looks like a visitation from the skies in that funny light color she always wears. That's my favorite on her. But for myself there's nothing I like better than dark blue." "Uh-huh," you say, looking at your color chart, "dark blue, sound common sense; extremely practical and capable. That's Charlie to a T."

"That's a beautiful piece of velvet over there, isn't it?" you asked Grace as you wandered through the store and your eye fell upon a piece of lustrous sky blue. "Wonderful," murmurs Grace, with a look of longing in her eyes. "That's my favorite color." Grace has all sorts of high ideals and she'll live up to them in spite of every handicap.

John always wears a cornflower in his buttonhole when he can possibly get one. He said the other day that he thought the color of a cornflower was the prettiest color in the world. John is the most loyal of lovers. He's up and doing all the time and very conscientious. If you've been kind of wondering in your heart whether you'll accept him when he proposes, make up your mind right now, and the next time he seems to be growing sentimental don't change the subject to the weather.

Green for the Optimist.

Margaret has everything around her in some shade of green. The little living room-bedroom-dining room-kitchen of her charming one roomed apartment is a symphony in green. Margaret is full of life and hope and aspiration, cheerful as the first warm days of spring.

Bert has a favorite necktie that he couldn't help buying but that he doesn't dare to wear. It is a clear emerald green. He takes it out every little while, looks at it, tucks it back in the right hand corner of the top drawer of his chiffonier, and says "Aw!" when Sister Nellie asks why he doesn't wear it. Maybe his family doesn't know it but he has a splendid and strong character. He may seem grumpy sometimes, but in his heart he is as optimistic as the fabled person who never sees the hole in the doughnut of life.

You never saw Nancy in anything but a pale green evening gown. She not only refuses to wear any other color at night but you'd want to cry if she did, for she is the loveliest creature of spring, with her fragile, lithe body, her flower-like face, and her soft golden brown hair. She has an exceedingly æsthetic temperament and the true artist's view of life.

Olive green, that warm color that the one and only man likes best to see you in, is the color of the kindly and peace loving person who would put himself out to try to understand you.

"I think the color of the sage on the western plains is the most beautiful color I ever saw," answered Howard when you asked him what his notion of a beautiful color is. He is a thrifty and foresighted person. He'll have water in the kitchen of the little house before he takes you to the ranch to make a home for you, but he won't buy you a huge solitaire to dazzle your girl friends with at your announcement party.

Don't take into your heart any one who has a honin' for that dark, harsh shade of green. Folks who do never make good friends, 'cause they're liable to be sarcastic and altogether unpleasant and unsociable.

"Mine's lime green," answered Cora. If you go to call on her you'll find books, books everywhere. She's more interested in literature than in almost anything else in life.

Strong and Lively Like Red.

Somebody said once rather disparagingly that men and savages always like red. Since red is symbolic of strength and vitality, both of mind and body, it's a splendid color to have for a favorite. Look around at the people you know who have red hair. Aren't they vigorous enough in body and mind?

Mrs. Conklin next door brought over a new pillow she had just made yesterday. "Do you know," she said, "I've always loved that particular shade of warm, bright red, and every little while I have to get something red for the house or a bow to wear or something." She's the biggest hearted person you ever knew, isn't she—always ready to do anything she can for anybody, never turning a hungry man away from the door, and willing to keep the baby all day long while you go into town to shop, to a matinée tea afterwards, and even having dinner all ready when you come home with a cheery "I thought you'd be tired, dearie, so I started supper."

Jackson rather shamefacedly admits that he likes scarlet better than any other color. He's a good friend to have and generous, but if a question ever arose where justice might be swerved a little by mercy he will demand the pound of flesh and feel that he is doing no more than his duty.

Dorothy always wears dull dark red—declares, in fact, that she'd never wear any other color if she wasn't afraid her friends would think she had only one suit and gown. She is a selfish, self-seeking little thing, snippish and snobbish.

"Mine's maroon," growls the little boy across the street when he hears you talking about favorite colors. And he has the worst temper on the block. He'll be a frightfully melancholy man probably. He'll sit with his back to the sunset all his life.

Jean's idea of bliss is to have a remnant of rose red silk, a pair of scissors, and a rainy day at her disposal. "It's a joy to look at that exquisite color," she says. She has a happy, joyous disposition. She likes plenty of sunshine and friends and a good time.

Gertrude's room is always filled with the palest of pink roses. The wall paper is dotted with them, the cretonne fittings of her room are rose sprigged, and she will tell you that pink is the heavenliest color on earth. She's more than a little inclined to firtation, and she has so many suitors that she doesn't know what to do.

Lovers of Sunshine Favor Yellow.

Henry says he thinks yellow is nearer the color of sunshine than anything he can think of and he likes to have as much sunshine as possible in his life. Henry is as clever a person and bubbling over with health and good spirits as any you know. He has a six cylinder brain. If he can't afford to take you into the country on Sunday in a machine he'll bundle you up on the train and you will never miss the machine that he can't afford because he'll make up in clever conversation what is lacking in luxury. He likes to travel, and he's one of those rare souls, a cheerful traveling companion.

Mrs. Burns in the next block says she loves the springtime because then she can have daffodils around her. She is the most charming hostess in your neighborhood. She can step into a difficult situation and by the sheer force of her personality straighten out all the tangled threads. She is noted for her tact and for her hospitality. You are always welcome there, and every one believes her when she says "I'm never so happy as when I'm surrounded by my friends."

Blanche insists upon wearing with every gown a splash of orange, a tie, a bow, an enameled pin. That tiny painted candle she gave you last Christmas with its brilliant shade expressed her nature in its most sincere form. She is proud and on some occasions haughty, but she has a keen sense of color.

Aunt Frances never "feels dressed without her amber beads," she says. She is one of the true intellectuals. She has a brilliant mind and skill of finger, as well as of brain.

Marjorie is always a symphony in brown. She simply can't seem to care for any other color, she admits, when you ask her what color her new gown is going to be. She's a sweet little, quiet, home loving body. She is cherishing in her heart a dream of a big farmer man who will win her and take her to live in a little bungalow on the edge of a huge orchard. Not for her the white lights of the great white way nor the jingle of the after theater dance orchestras. She'd rather curl up in a big fireside chair with a good book and a plate of fudge than trip it lightly with any man, be he Vernon Castle himself.

Madeline is the central figure in a soft tan picture when she is at home. Abroad she has the distinguished air of being exceptionally quietly well groomed. She has an innate smartness about clothes and she can never spend two vacations in the same place. She has gone abroad as often as she had the opportunity and she is essentially a cosmopolitan.

Nobility in Purple.

Sister Janet's most favored suitor wears a purple tie every time he comes to see her. You're sure it isn't the same one, because Brother Bobby gathered statistics about the various variations of shade and design, which he proclaimed vociferously at the dinner table last night. "I've counted ten," he vouchsafed, "all purple. Seems silly to me when he could get red uns." Which makes you sure that purple must be his favorite color. When you find with the aid of your color chart that purple is the sign of a noble nature, often deeply religious, indicative of strength of character, nobility, and true unselfishness, you say: "I wasn't wrong about him. I hope Janet gets him."

Doris says quietly that she has always loved violet. She is spiritual, idealistic, and pure hearted, and she has an almost unbelievable power of comforting her friends. Everybody goes to her when trouble threatens. You feel certain that, no matter what the matter is, she will help you to overcome the difficulty.

Harold says that if he had his way every woman in town would dress in gray. He has an essentially artistic nature.

The dear little bride across the hall wears the most adorable dove gray gowns and has her dining room finished in gray. She is as sweet and gentle a little soul as you could hope to find.

Do you remember Mrs. Bacon at the lake last year, who had an atmosphere of slate gray around her all the time? Her frocks, the big house, almost everything was slate gray. She is a most careful and economic person, who makes a silver dollar do the work of a five dollar gold piece.

"I think white is the sweetest color," gently adds Susan, the baby of the family. She has chosen the color of light and harmony and innocence and simplicity. She will never be accused of having a hasty temper or of being selfish or disagreeable.

You must be careful in reading the characters of your friends not to jump at conclusions about their favorite colors. Sometimes a color will be fashionable and consequently popular; sometimes somebody else has had a finger in the color scheme, which gives you a clew. But if you're careful you'll not make any mistakes.

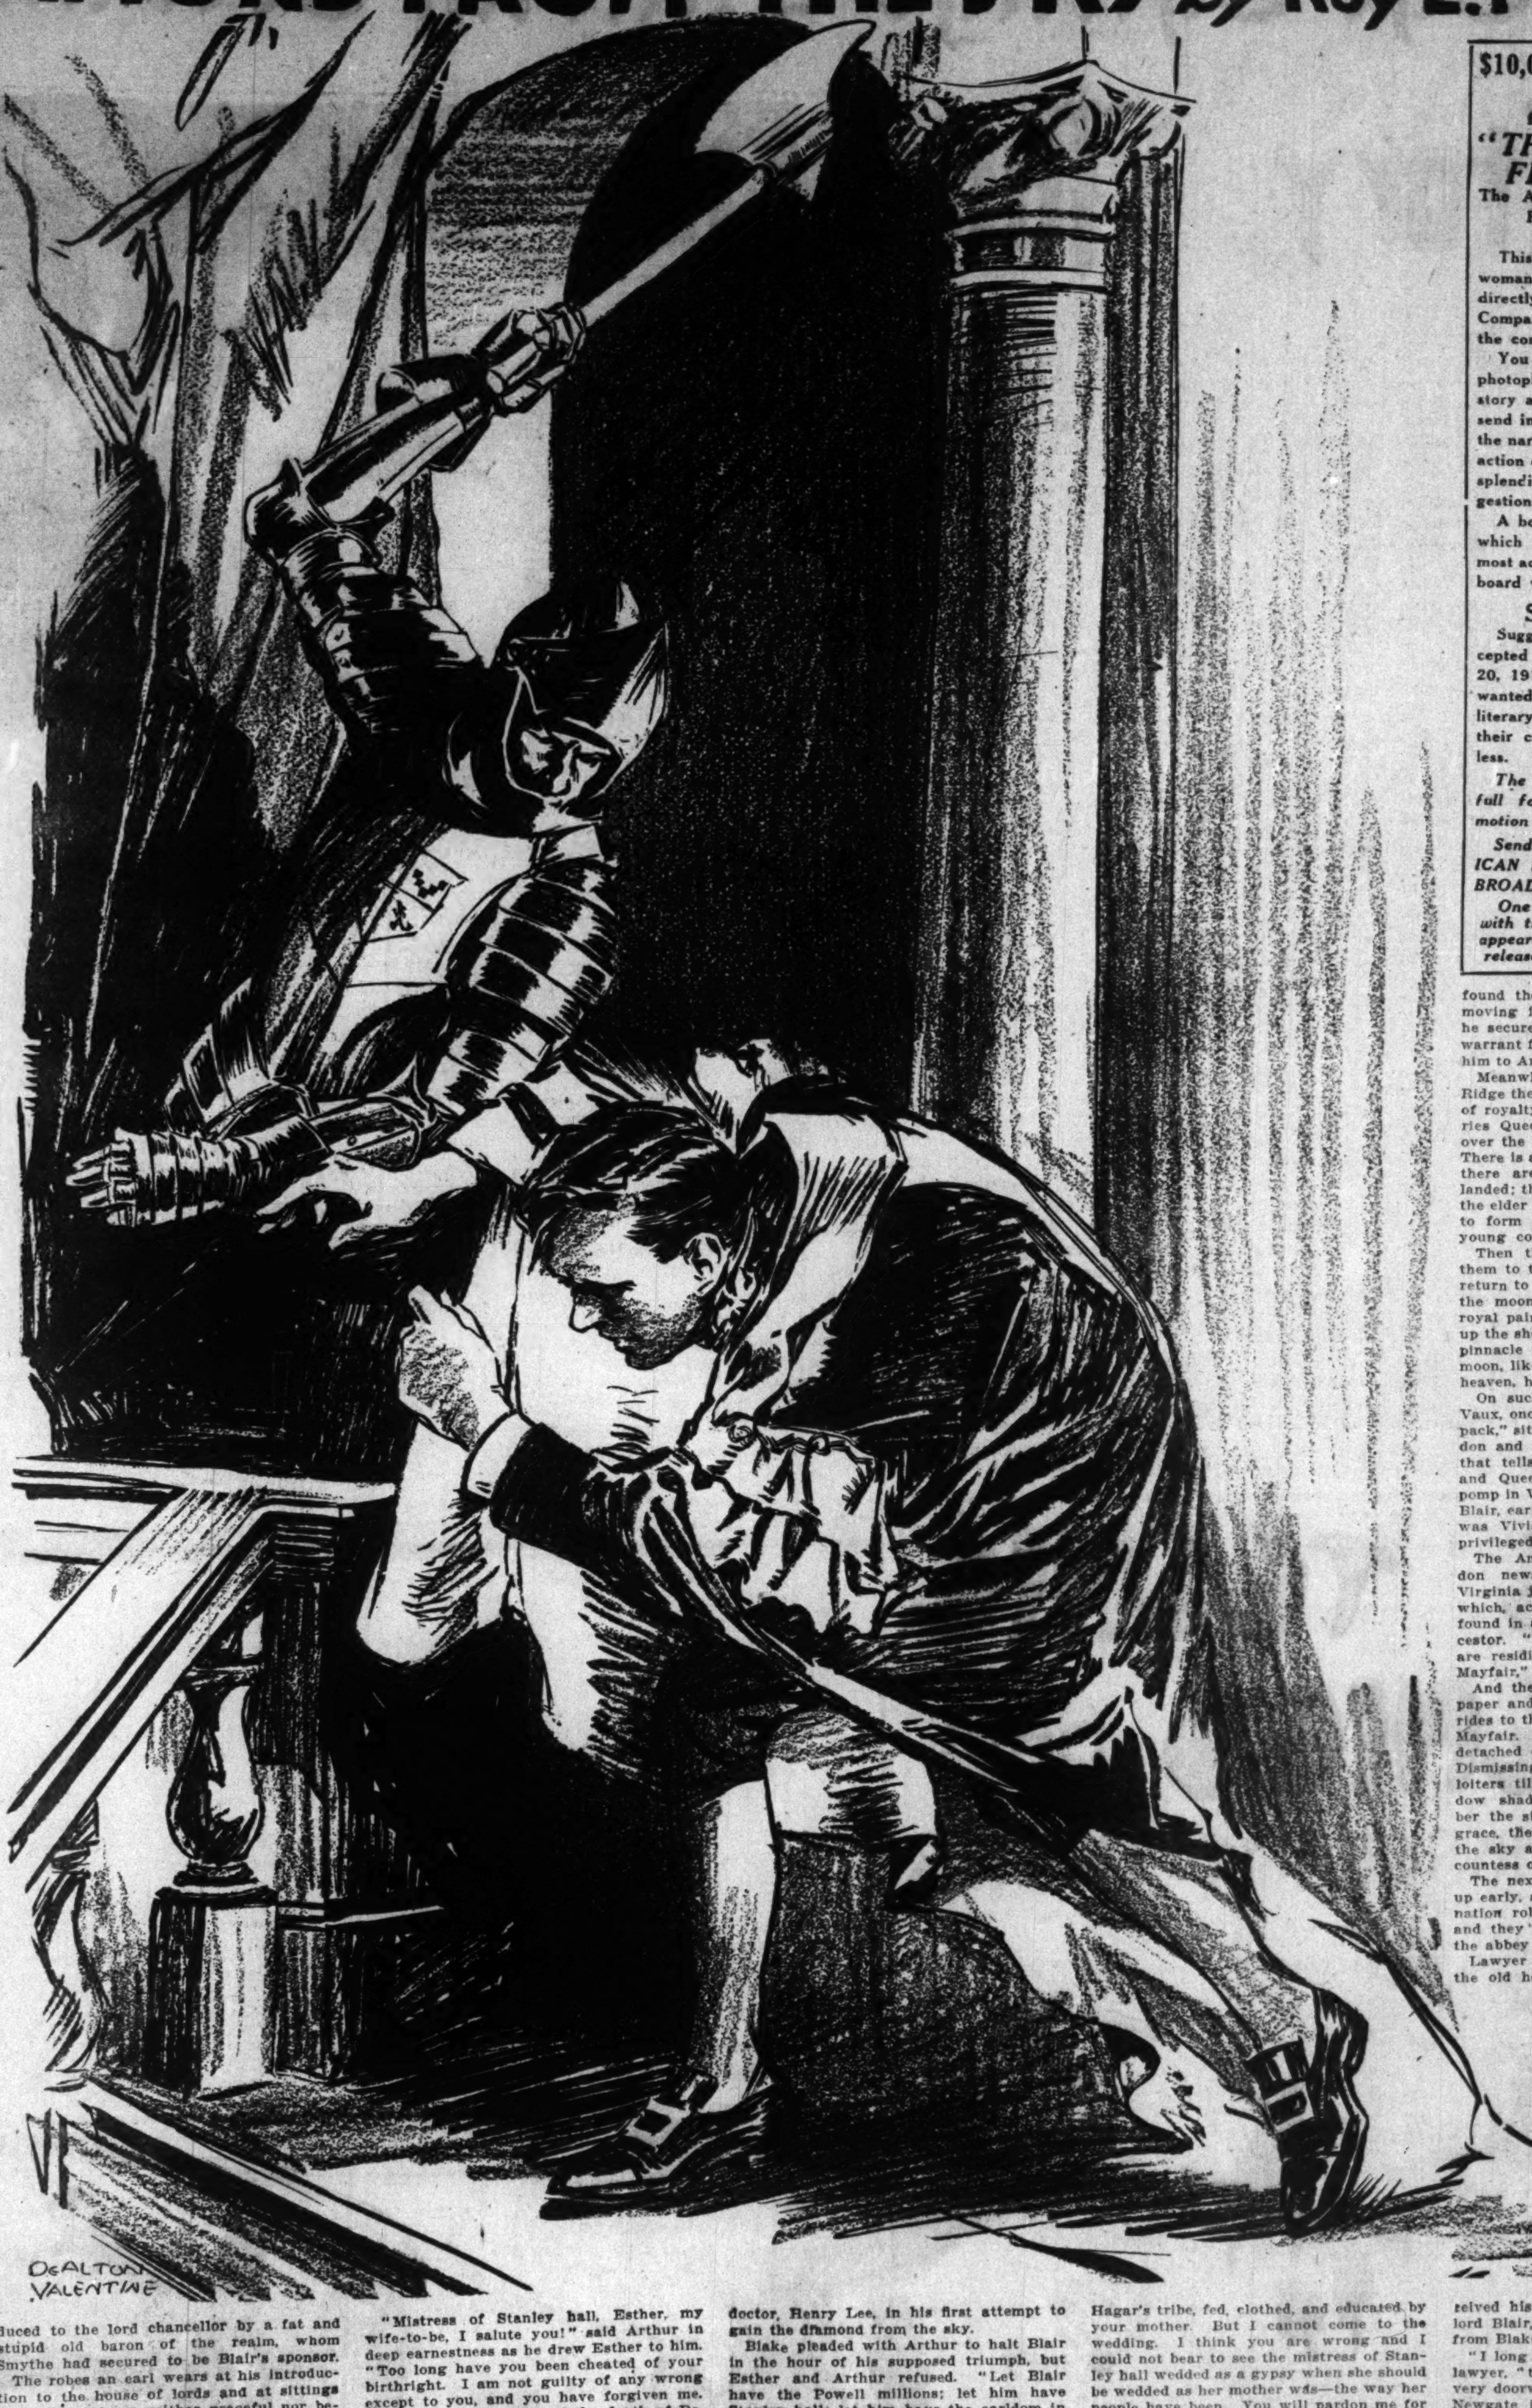
THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

by Roy L. McCardell

SYNOPSIS OF "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY."

A diamond that fell in a meteor centuries ago belongs to the elder branch of the Stanley family in Virginia. This diamond goes with the title to the Stanley earldom in England, that now comes to the Virginia Stanleys. To cheat a hated kinsman of both Col. Stanley has substituted a gypsy baby boy, bought from its unnatural father, for the little daughter born to him. His young wife dies, the coerced gypsy mother returns and takes in revenge the little Stanley girl baby, reared in secret, and rears the child as her own. The gypsy's son grows up to a reckless wastrel and becomes great friends with Blair Stanley, who is rightful heir. Blair is reckless and desperate, and hates Arthur, but dissembles. Arthur strangely learns he is only a gypsy changeling, and flees west under the assumed name of John Powell, taking the blame of a murder Blair has committed—Blair telling Arthur it was not murder but an accident—Arthur believing he has wronged and cheated Blair. But Arthur does not tell Blair he is the false heir and Blair the rightful one. The diamond from the sky passes from hand to hand, sought for its value by many, and it causes tragedies. In California Arthur becomes a millionaire, and is surrounded by enemies who seek his ruin. He is injured in an accident, and these enemies make a drug fiend of him. Esther, supposed to be only a gypsy girl, learns she is really Esther Stanley, and comes to California seeking Arthur, whom she loves. Vivian Marston, an adventuress, secretly married to Blair, together with Durand and De Vaux, heads of a diamond gang, and Blair Stanley, plot to keep Esther from Arthur. Blair takes charge of Arthur's great business affairs, while Durand, De Vaux, and Vivian lead "John Powell, the mad millionaire"—as Arthur is known—to wilder dissipations, the whole plot being to ruin Arthur morally, financially, and physically. Blair seeks Arthur's wealth and ultimately his death, that he (Blair) may gain the diamond from the sky and the earldom. Vivian also desires the diamond, as do Durand and De Vaux. Blair double crosses his former gypsy accomplice, Luke Lovell, and railroads him to prison. Esther is puzzled at Arthur's strange conduct—for the plotters convince their drug victim he is going insane, and that symptoms of this are his hallucinations that he sees Esther. Hagar, Esther's foster mother, is but slowly recovering from a blow that Blair dealt her, which rendered her temporarily deranged. Meanwhile Esther's devoted friends, Quabba a hunchback, and Marmaduke Smythe, an English lawyer seeking the heir to the Stanley earldom, are her only friends. Esther learns Arthur is addicted to drugs, and in disgust spurns him, understanding at last the cause of his strange behavior. She casts aside the diamond from the sky he proffered. Luke escapes from prison and secures the diamond. Luke sends the diamond to Esther and Hagar in Virginia, and they return it by express, with a prayer, to Arthur. Disheartened at the treachery of Blair and Vivian and the sorrow he has caused his gypsy mother and the devoted Esther, he resolves to kill himself. But Luke Lovell, breaking in upon him drinks the poison, and, being further disfigured while attired in Arthur's apparel, etc., his body is supposed to be Arthur's, or rather, "John Powell's." Arthur escapes in an aeroplane, finds Esther, receives his dying mother's blessing, and shakes off his drug addiction.



CHAPTER XXIX.

A DEAL WITH DESTINY.

WE all deal with destiny, wittingly or not. He who had been Arthur Stanley and John Powell, alike wastrel and profligate and yet fondly beloved, had mounted the stairway of the wind and rode upon the wings of the morning, without fear and without hope. He had dealt with destiny and had won. By some miracle of the commonplace the falling aeroplane had struck a low, thick, sturdy tree and the man plunging to death had been thrown up into the canvas wing of the bird machine, and so, save that he was stunned by the jar, had escaped unharmed.

The wondering gypsies chafed his hands and brow; one put a brandy flask to his lips and forced a few of its fiery drops between the clenched teeth. All the while Esther held his head upon her lap and a great joy filled her being, for she knew he lived and had come back to her shed of the husk of sin and selfishness. And so when he opened his eyes he looked into Esther's, and they both read what their lips could not utter—forgiveness, love, and happiness!

They bore Arthur back to the gypsy camp near by in wondering silence, and then Esther relieved the gypsy woman watching by the couch of Hagar and whispered to the dying woman, "Can you bear a great happiness?"

A smile transfigured the wan face of Hagar. "I know the good news you bring," she murmured. "Arthur, my dear son, is here!"

In those few moments of deep rapture Hagar realized at last that all her sorrows and sacrifices had not been in vain. Her son, parted from her since his birth hour, was in her arms at last—the man she had always hoped that he would grow to be! She laid Esther's hand in his and breathed a final blessing upon these two she loved above all else—and so this gentle, yet strong, heroic soul passed to its reward.

After Hagar had been laid to rest the gypsies, led by Arthur, now calling himself by the name of Harding, journeyed on back to fair Virginia to their mountain rendezvous in the Blue Ridge. The journey was long and slow and yet a happy one for the fond lovers. As if, in truth, the evil husk had fallen from him in the plunge from the clouds that Blair's treacherous tampering with the aeroplane had caused, Arthur had found the drug addiction and its desire pass from him. If it was by a struggle with the flesh he did not show it. His eyes grew bright; his tanned face glowed with happiness, and ever through the sun and shade Esther, his beloved, rode by his side, her tender hand in his.

How fares it with Blair Stanley and his fair wife, who was Vivian Marston? Have they not everything their hearts have long desired? They have the wealth of John Powell, for Blair was next of kin when it was proved the supposedly dead John Powell was Arthur Stanley, fugitive. They have the diamond from the sky and the Stanley earldom, for to these things long desired Blair also is heir as next of kin.

And Luke Lovell, with a face crushed beyond recognition, lies in a western graveyard with the name of Arthur Stanley on his tomb.

The physicians who examined the dead man knew nothing of the drug addictions of John Powell; they sought for no marks of these. The wounds and scars on Luke's body from his escape from prison and other hard knocks he had endured, were believed to be the marks of injuries that Arthur Stanley, alias John Powell, had sustained in the brawl and riot at his mines that had for a while incapacitated him, such time as he had been under the care of the dead Durand, posing as his private physician. Blair and Vivian shunned proximity to the dead nor looked upon the crushed encoffined form again.

Then before Blake, the detective, or Abe Bloom, the Richmond gambler, the first deeming justice should be done and the latter desiring the diamond from the sky, could make a move Blair and Vivian crossed the continent from Los Angeles and had sailed for London.

Blake waited cautiously to strike, and Abe Bloom had been in too many shady transactions to be in any position to make an open demand on Blair for the diamond, which had been promised him in the bargain for his silence.

So Blair and Vivian journeyed to London and were received, with some ill grace, by Marmaduke Smythe, for a lifetime solicitor and family lawyer to the earls of Stanley. But Marmaduke Smythe did his duty as he saw it. He had all the credentials, and in due time Blair was inducted into the house of lords. This brief and somewhat bald ceremony was not at all satisfying to the luxury and display loving Vivian. She had sat in the peeresses' gallery in ordinary afternoon attire and had seen Blair introduced to the lord chancellor by a fat and stupid old baron of the realm, whom Smythe had secured to be Blair's sponsor.

The robes an earl wears at his introduction to the house of lords and at sittings of parliament are neither graceful nor becoming. It was the first bitterness to Vivian, who had imagined an occasion of great splendor. Blair wore an ordinary morning suit under his robes—for it was the custom, Smythe had assured them, and when one is a peer one must do everything according to custom.

Then when Vivian and Blair were to be presented at court, which meant something more satisfying in costume and ceremony, King Edward VII. died and King George V. reigned in his stead. There was the usual period of mourning and no royal drawing room until after the coronation.

So, while Vivian and Blair are busy with court tailors and court dressmakers and are feverishly preparing for the glories they are to be part of, and while, day by day, the suspicion and distrust between them and Marmaduke Smythe grows in intensity, let us return to America among the humble gypsy folk.

The gypsies had reached Virginia and the neighborhood of Fairfax. The caravan moved on under the leadership of Quabba, headman for Arthur and Esther. Skirting around Fairfax, Arthur and Esther rode in the twilight and stood at the portals of Stanley hall. The place was barred and bolted and fast falling to decay. Weeds rankled on the once well kept lawns and flower beds. A weather stained, discolored sign, "For Rent," hung by rusty nails to one of the great pillars. A whippoorwill called mournfully from the shrubbery in the gathering twilight.

"Mistress of Stanley hall, Esther, my wife-to-be, I salute you!" said Arthur in deep earnestness as he drew Esther to him. "Too long have you been cheated of your birthright. I am not guilty of any wrong except to you, and you have forgiven me. Blair Stanley is guilty of the death of Dr. Lee and I feel sure that Blake has the proofs. The time has come when, for your sake, the truth must be known, and you must take your place in this stately home of your people where I dwelt so long an impostor to foster the ambitions of the dead and to augment their feuds and hatreds."

Esther shuddered and threw herself into his arms. "No, Arthur!" she cried. "I have never been happy here! Let the dead and their secrets rest in the grave. Rich and of position, you know no happiness, nor would I. It was not your dying mother's wish, I know. Looking into the face of death she saw clearly. All she desired was that we should be happy together. When last within this gloomy house with her I asked for a sign, and it was given to me. And I repeat this to you as we repeated it together that night:

"'Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following after thee, for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge. Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God.'"

And so as the twilight turned to darkness these two rode away from Stanley hall to dwell unknown, obscure, among the simple gypsy people who loved them.

Here the astute Tom Blake of Richmond found them, and here he brought a copy of the proofs of Blair's guilt—the finger print markings from the murder scene, the library where Blair had slain the kind old doctor, Henry Lee, in his first attempt to gain the diamond from the sky.

Blake pleaded with Arthur to halt Blair in the hour of his supposed triumph, but Esther and Arthur refused. "Let Blair have the Powell millions; let him have Stanley hall; let him have the earldom in England and the diamond from the sky," said Arthur. "We have more than all these things, for in casting them aside we have found love and happiness!"

"Your mother, Hagar Harding, was my best friend. She gave me my start in life," said Blake huskily. "I will abide by your wish. Abe Bloom suspects much but knows little regarding Blair Stanley. Bloom dare not move unless I say so and I can hold him quiet. Even near Fairfax you will never be recognized in the gypsy, Arthur Harding, by the people who knew you as Arthur Stanley. The few short years have changed you, but it is different with Miss Esther Stanley here. Who could not tell her? You cannot keep the secret on this account, I know."

"This is a sheltered place which only the gypsies know the way to, only the gypsies with the exception of yourself," replied Arthur. "You know the way because my mother taught you, and you know the Romany password that admits you past the outer vans. This is the old rendezvous of my mother. The gypsies own the very land. We will not be here long—only for our wedding, which will be a gypsy one. None but a Romany can be at the wedding—none but you, for you were adopted into the tribe as a boy, I am told."

"Yes, I was picked up by your mother a starved and wretched lad, a runaway from a miserable almshouse in the middle west," replied Blake softly. "I was adopted into Hagar's tribe, fed, clothed, and educated by your mother. But I cannot come to the wedding. I think you are wrong and I could not bear to see the mistress of Stanley hall wedded as a gypsy when she should be wedded as her mother was—the way her people have been. You will pardon me for speaking from my heart?"

Esther smiled. "You are too serious, Mr. Blake," she said. "It is the only way I would be wed. You may be an adopted gypsy, and Arthur may be a born one, but of us three I am the real Romany, and I will have the wedding of a gypsy queen and none other!"

But in the privacy of his sanctum in his Richmond agency the next day Blake smiled to himself as he said, "Blair Stanley, you destroyed one set of proofs when you struck down Hagar and wrested them from her. Arthur destroyed the set I took to him, but Tom Blake had the originals!"

Then he sighed and gazed at a portrait of Hagar that hung upon the wall of his sanctum. The picture was enscribed from Hagar to Blake. The eyes of the portrait seemed living ones in the earnest gaze of the detective. "You are dead," he said, "but your spirit lives, I know. Whatever was the wish of your steadfast heart that thing shall be accomplished, and perhaps I yet shall be the instrument of it!"

He spoke prophetically. In far away London the sincerely faithful lawyer Smythe writhed in secret protest at the title having come to Blair and Vivian. He had seen Blair take his seat in the house of lords and no word came from Blake, although he had cabled the Richmond detective to send proofs of Blair's guilt and secure a requisition. Blake now went to this latter task. But, influential as he was, he found the Virginia jurists were averse to moving in the matter. After long delay he secured with all the secrecy possible a warrant for Blair and a requisition to return him to America, and this he sent to Smythe.

Meanwhile in the fastness of the Blue Ridge there is a royal wedding, the nuptials of royalty in Romany. King Arthur marries Queen Esther, and gypsies from all over the land have gathered for the event. There is a Maypole; and there is music; and there are garlands. The vans are garlanded; the little children strew flowers and the elder gypsies bear branches of blossoms to form a flower archway for the royal young couple.

Then the happy, dancing gypsies light them to the royal van with flambeaux and return to dance and drink and sing beneath the moonlight by the Maypole. But the royal pair steal away unseen and clamber up the sheer hillside, and from a great rock pinnacle they sit embraced and watch the moon, like a shield of silver on the wall of heaven, hang over the dim vale below.

On such a night the dapper Count de Vaux, once "knave of clubs of the diamond pack," sits in his bachelor chambers in London and reads again the coronation story that tells that on the morrow George V. and Queen Mary shall be crowned with pomp in Westminster abbey. He reads that Blair, earl of Stanley, and his countess, who was Vivian Marston, will be among the privileged high born present.

The American earl, so says the London newspaper, will wear the famous Virginia jewel, the diamond from the sky—which, according to family tradition, was found in a fallen meteor by a colonial ancestor. "The earl and countess of Stanley are residing in London at Stanley house, Mayfair," concludes the article.

And the dapper De Vaux lays aside the paper and goes out. He takes a cab and rides to the neighborhood of Stanley house, Mayfair. It fronts Regent's park and is a detached old edifice of Tudor architecture. Dismissing the cab, De Vaux watches and loiters till late. He sees against a window shade of my lady Stanley's chamber the silhouetted reflection of his noble grace, the earl, clasping the diamond from the sky around the shapely throat of the countess of Stanley!

The next day the earl and his lady are up early, attiring themselves in their coronation robes, for the crush will be great and they must be in their state coach to the abbey in due time.

Lawyer Smythe in his Gothic chamber in the old house is not happy. He has received his congé from the noble earl, my lord Blair, and, besides, he has not heard from Blake, the Richmond detective.

"I long in my soul," muses the eccentric lawyer, "to have his grace arrested in the very doorway of the abbey and dragged to Newgate in fetters! Though that would make the dead and gone earls of Stanley turn in their stately graves!"

As if in answer to his wishes a flunkey taps at his chamber door and announces that the postman is below with a registered package for him; and, taking his hat, without which he never stirs outdoors, Smythe descends to the portals of Stanley house.

Called to my lady's boudoir as he passes in the corridor, the lackey informs his questioning grace of the registered mail package for Smythe. Fearful of some bitter disappointment, fearful of his criminal past in America, Blair, earl of Stanley, leaving the lackey to do some service for the Countess Vivian at her tiring, hurries down the great Gothic stairway to intercept any ill omened message that may have come from America to Smythe.

As Blair, ninth earl of Stanley, reaches the last landing of the Gothic stairway the armor of Sir Geoffrey Stanley of Agincourt is behind him. Then the mailed arm is silently uplifted and then it descends, bringing the battle mace it holds down with crushing force upon the yet uncoroneted head of the American earl. Down the stricken man falls headlong. The clattering figure in armor treads down the steps and bends over the crumpled, bleeding figure in the robes of an earl and from the ermined breast of the prostrate Blair a mailed hand draws away the diamond from the sky!

The Story of the Third Beggar

From the Arabian Nights

By

Wm. Donahey

SYNOPSIS OF WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

A poor porter carried home many good things for a lovely lady who employed him to carry her bundles. After he unloads his crate, she and her two sisters invite him to feast with them. Later three beggars, all blind in the left eye and curiously shaven, ask for food and are admitted. Later yet the caliph, with his vizier and a slave, all disguised as merchants, are added to the party. Each man is asked to promise that, no matter what he sees or hears, he will ask no questions. Soon the second sister brings in two black dogs, which the elder beats and then weeps over. The caliph cannot restrain his curiosity and asks the reason for this strange scene. Immediately the women have their guests seized and are to have them severely punished, when they relent, saying that if the three beggars will tell their adventures and how each lost his eye all the men will be pardoned their curiosity. The story of the third beggar follows.

"STRANGE as it may seem," said the third beggar, "I, too, am the son of a king; and, moreover, I am at present a king in my own right, could I but return to my kingdom. As soon as I succeeded to the throne I fulfilled a long cherished desire of taking a trip by sea. I fitted out a ship with every comfort, convenience, and luxury, hired the most capable of captains and sailors, and set out in search of adventure. Sad was the day when I left my palace behind me!

"We had not progressed far before a great storm arose. Our vessel was stanch, but the wind drove us far from our route, and when the skies cleared I cried out in surprise at the great number of fish which were floating, dead, on the top of the sea. The captain came to look and turned pale at the sight. Just then a sailor called out that a huge black mountain seemed looming ahead of us.

"'I feared it—we are indeed undone!' cried the captain. He cast his turban upon the deck, wept, prayed, and commanded us all to prepare to die.

"When I demanded an explanation he told me that in the sea was a huge mountain which was enchanted, so that when a ship, or anything containing iron, approached it all the iron was immediately attracted to the mountain. Every nail, he said, would soon fly from its place, and we be cast adrift. He set the men to work lashing planks together with ropes, but before there were rafts enough for all of us the current had swept us close to the mountain, and suddenly the ship trembled and fell apart beneath our feet, the nails and locks and bolts in it flying in a cloud through the air and fastening themselves upon the sides of the mountain, already thick with the iron from other lost ships.

"I found myself in the sea with a raft beneath me and, seeing no other men close by, tried to paddle myself toward the fatal mountain, succeeding so well that soon I was on land again. Before me were steps which seemed cut in the mountain, and offering up a prayer for my safety, I climbed them. The captain had told me that upon the top of the mountain was a cupola of brass, supported by ten brazen columns, covering a horse of brass, upon which sat a man made entirely of brass, holding a spear in his hand and with a mystic tablet of lead upon his breast, and that it was really this horseman who made the mountain dangerous, for if he was even overthrown it would be as other mountains again.

"'If I may only be permitted to overthrow this horseman,' I thought, 'what a great thing I shall have done for mankind!' but I had at the same time rather doubted his existence. Now, however, I saw the cupola and horseman before me. Overcome with fatigue, I threw myself down for a rest and slept. In my sleep a voice cried out to me: 'O son of Cassib, when thou wakest, dig beneath thy feet and thou shalt find a bow of brass and three leaden arrows. If thou wishest to relieve mankind of this awful curse, shoot the horseman and he will fall into the sea, and then thou must bury the bow. When it is hidden the sea will rise mountains high, but fear not. Look among the giant waves for a boat of brass, rowed by a man of brass. Go with him, but utter not the name of God, or thou wilt suffer.'

"Waking, I did as I was told. The horseman fell into the sea with a crashing noise. In the monstrous waves appeared a boat, which carried me safely away. But I forgot! I thanked God. As I mentioned his name the boat vanished. I was cast upon a desert isle, with only fruit to eat. Presently I saw a ship approaching, and hiding till I saw what manner of folk it brought, saw men come on shore bearing many luxuries, which they carried down into a cave in the heart of the island. Then they brought a slender, handsome boy, put him in the cave, hid its opening from view, and sailed away again, leaving the boy behind them.

"Astounded and curious, I climbed down and entered the cave. The boy was already lonely and glad to see me. I told him I had been shipwrecked and asked his story.

"'I am,' he said, 'the only son of a wealthy man. At my birth it was foretold that when I was 15 I should be slain by King Ajib, son of Cassib, after he has overthrown the brazen horseman on the Mountain of Lodestone and lifted a curse from mankind. Recently we heard that this horseman had been overthrown. So my father prepared for me this safe place, and has brought me here to stay till I am past 15. After that, there will be no danger. And King Ajib surely cannot slay me here, can he?'

"'Indeed he cannot,' said I, angry at the use that had been made of my name, and I proceeded to do all I could to make the life of the boy happy, for I had loved him from the first, so handsome, gentle, and kindly was he. We lived happily together many days, and he passed his fifteenth birthday, at which he was greatly pleased.

"'Now,' he said, 'I am safe and my father will be very happy and will come for me soon. The curse is lifted.'

"'Yes,' said I, and set about preparing our meal, when suddenly a knife flew from my hand accidentally and buried itself in the breast of the poor boy! Overcome with sorrow, I hid myself from the bereaved father when he came, and finally escaped to another island, where I found in a gorgeous palace ten young men, all blind of the left eye, who received me kindly, and with whom I lived happily till my curiosity overcame me and I asked how all came to have such an affliction.

"'Your doom is sealed; you will soon know,' they answered. 'You, too, have been too curious. You shall find out for yourself—and, remember, there is still hope for you if you will only do as you are told.'

"I was transported to another palace, where were many beauteous maidens, music, feasting, and flowers, and I did not understand where there was any woe for me till one day the maidens all went away for a month, telling me I could wander where I liked, except in one closet, and giving me keys to everything, even to the forbidden door.

"For days I enjoyed myself in the many beautiful rooms I was allowed to visit, but at last I had seen them all. I wished ardently to look into the forbidden place. At last I could control myself no longer. I put the key in the lock and opened the door. A wonderful odor swept over me, music surrounded me, and I beheld a beautiful great black winged horse standing before a crystal manger. 'What can hurt me here?' I cried, and, going to the beautiful horse, mounted him. He did not move, but I beat and kicked him till suddenly he spread his great wings. We flew to such an enormous height that I fainted. Then he swept down again, lighted on the roof of a palace, made me dismount, and flew away again. But as he flew he struck me in the face with his tail, and struck out my left eye. When the pain abated I went down from the roof and found myself among the ten one-eyed young men, who mocked at me for my curiosity, saying, 'You are answered.' But in spite of the fact that they had endured what I had, they would not let me stay with them. For a penance I shaved off my beard, put on the clothes of a beggar, and started away on foot to try to find my kingdom again. That, ladies, is my story."

"Now tell us yours," cried the elder of the women to the caliph and his companions. "This last tale is, I think, the strangest of all. What have you to offer?"

"Nothing interesting," said the caliph humbly. "We are merely three poor stranger merchants who have lost our way."

"Well," said the lady, "I will let you all go." But as the caliph left the house he marked it carefully. "I in turn must hear the story of the ladies and why they so beat those dogs," he said to his vizier. And next morning he sent for the three sisters.

THE TEENIE WEENIES HAVE A THANKSGIVING DINNER

By

Wm. Donahey

IT was a cold night. The wind blew so strong that it bent the rose bush until its dry leaves scraped the top of the Shoe House, where the Teenie Weenies lived. The Teenie Weenies sat about the tiny fireplace inside, watching the flames as they leaped up the chimney from the big pile of logs, sawed from old lead pencils. "When's Thanksgiving?" asked the Dunce.

"Day after tomorrow," answered the Lady of Fashion, as she took a needle from her little work basket.

"O, say, but I'd like to have some turkey," cried the Dunce.

"Me likee turkee, too—likee much," cried the Chinaman, who had come in from the laundry to spend the evening with his friends.

"I'll tell you what we can do," suggested the Cook. "We can all go over to the house next door. I heard them say they were going to have a turkey on Thanksgiving. We can go over and watch, and when they are through dinner we can climb up on the table and help ourselves."

"That's a good idea, Cook," laughed the General. "I see where you get out of cooking a big Thanksgiving dinner."

"Well, a fellow's got to rest some time," mumbled the Cook, with a twinkle in his eye.

The Teenie Weenies anxiously waited for Thanksgiving day to come, for every one wished to have all the real turkey that he could eat.

On Thanksgiving day they all hurried over early to the house the Cook had spoken of, and, crawling under the crack of the door, they made their way straight to the dining room. The family was at dinner there, but presently they finished, and as soon as they went out of the room the eager Teenie Weenies scrambled up the tablecloth and landed on top of the table. Every one of the little people ate and ate.

"U-u-um, isn't this good?" cried the Dunce, biting into a piece of white meat almost as big as himself.

The Dutchman and the Indian found a big dish of raisins. They ate all they could and then carried a big bunch home on a toothpick for future use.

The Cook found the turkey's wishbone, and he and the Turk pulled at it with all their might to see which would get the lucky part.

"General, General," shouted one of the Teenie Weenie boys, "the Dunce has fallen into the gravy."

"Goodness, gracious me," cried the General, "is that foolish fellow in trouble again?" "No, sir; he's in the gravy," answered the small boy.

"Come on, fellows," ordered the General, "and help the Dunce out. Take him over there and give him a good scrubbing in that finger bowl."

When the Dunce had been thoroughly ducked in the water and the gravy all scraped off him the Teenie Weenies made their way home again.

That night the lights burned quite late in the Shoe House. Several Teenie Weenies had eaten too much, and the Doctor was busy filling hot water bags and giving peppermint in hot water.

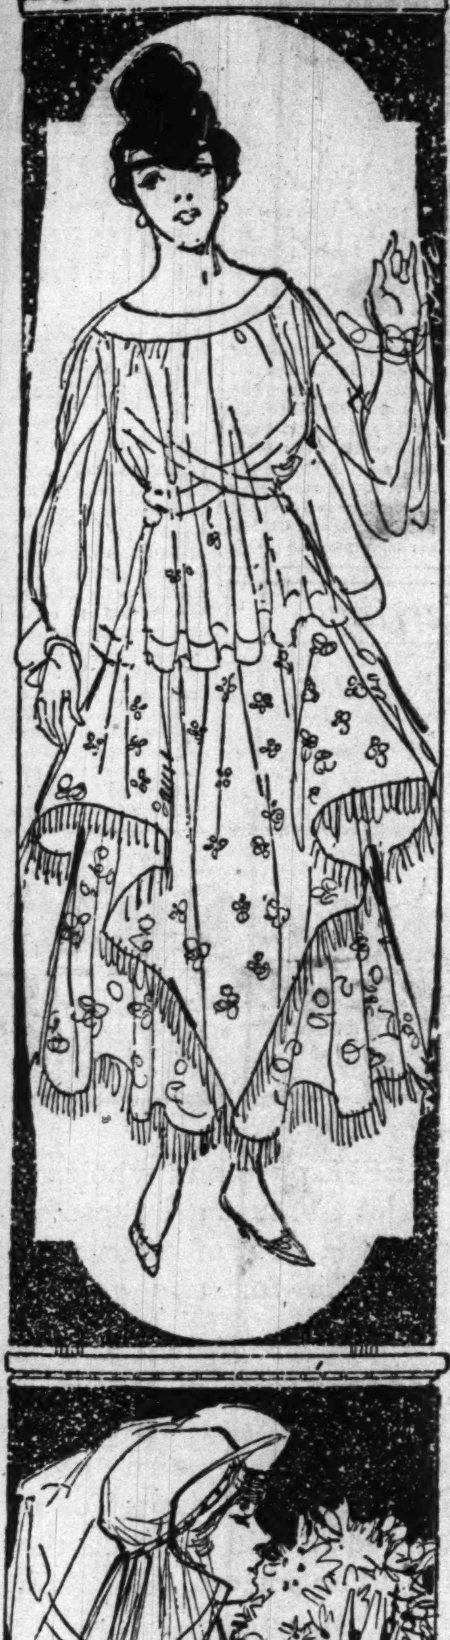
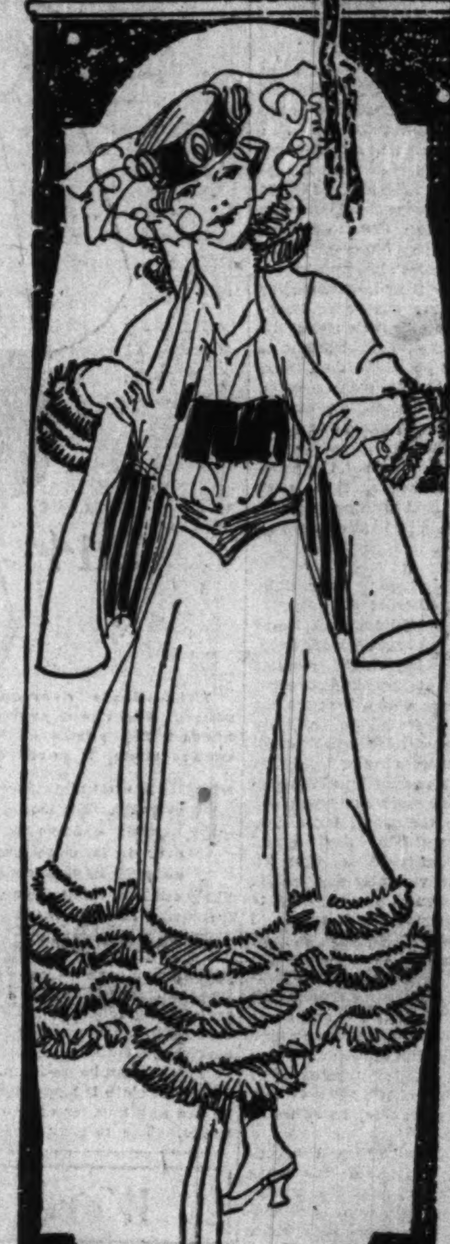
TROUSSEAU FOR THE WINTER BRIDE COMBINES SILHOUETTES OF YESTERDAY AND TODAY

SAYS Louise James





Two types of silhouettes are to the fore these days. One of them is the slender silhouette of seasons past which women have always loved. The other is the exaggeratedly full silhouette which couturieres have been trying now for months to thrust upon an unwilling public. Out of tumult and rebellion, 'however, a deft manipulation of the two extremes is resulting.

A CURSORY survey of the modes that have come and gone the last decade result in some self congratulatory comments over the modes of the present. From out of the shadowy past two types of silhouettes are apparent. One of them is the slender, slim silhouette which shows to advantage—or disadvantage—the outline of the figure. The other is the ruffled, puffed, wired, and even hooped silhouette which does everything in its power to conceal the original shape of the figure under a bunched up fullness which is anything but attractive.

Times and changes and adjustments follow one another in quick succession. Now we have a clever manipulation of a mode that is gone and a mode that is here resulting in a charming combination which predicates a mode that is to come.

The figure slender has been the figure for a number of seasons, and it has been a popular ideal—so popular indeed, that women are refusing to give it up and accept the extravagant abundance of material that has been thrust upon them. So what is left for the couturier to do but to compromise—and combine?

Fullness there must be, says didactic fashion. Slimness there must be, says willful woman. The result can be guessed beforehand—a slim silhouette showing through a certain degree of fullness. That is what the modern silhouette must be. That is what the trousseau of the winter bride must be.

Furthermore, since the winter styles are established, there is no need for the winter bride to hesitate over what styles she is to adopt into her all-important trousseau, and there are several things which she must take for granted before she branches off in the cultivating of her individuality.

She must wear as much fur as her purse allows. Her evening gowns must be gorgeous, her evening wraps luxurious, and her dancing frocks, dreams of floating, exquisite loveliness. Her street suits must be neutral in color, with skirts which incline to fullness and shortness, and coats which are narrow at shoulder and go in ever so slightly at the line of the waist. To get away from the ubiquitous blue and black and brown the manufacturers have introduced some delightfully subdued shades of red which charm by the force of their novelty, as well as by their general becomingness. A stunning leather motor coat for the woman who rides or drives would be an invaluable asset for the bride and these come in a number of different shades so that she could follow her individual taste.

As for lingerie, it must be of fine quality, but simple of design—all except the petticoats. They are extravagant in trimming, in fullness, in shortness—in almost every way it is possible for skirts to be. They are also of every imaginable kind of silk and satin. Crepe de chine in any color desired, as well as chiffon, satin, and lace, are put into the making of the latest negligees. The straight Empire line is still a becoming and stylish one and if wished the severe line of the back may be broken by soft lace at the neck and the shoulders. There are charming boudoir caps, too, of all kinds. Some of the new ones have long cascades of lace at the back which are not at all unlike the new bridal veils. These are not inexpensive. They are often of Lierre or oriental lace and even at times of filet.

There are many delightful accessories also, which the bride-to-be naturally wants to include in her trousseau. There are all kinds of new hosiery which are decorated in strange and fantastic fashion. For instance, there is the new ruffled hosiery with the ruffles made of the same silk as the stocking and cut in circular fashion. Then, too, there are stockings which are fur trimmed about the ankles. And boots of all colors, though the bootmakers did promise last summer that they were not going to burst into any orgy of color. Green, purple, violet, and blue, too, which is really the saddest of all.

Fur tops, however, the same as fur cuffs on the sleeves, are extremely attractive. And as for brilliant heeled slippers, one sees them at every dance these days. And I have even seen a pair of brocaded slippers on which cabochons with green paradise plumes are used.

Neither can the bride of the moment give too much attention to the choice of her evening coat and wraps, for she will wear them constantly with all of the mid-winter frivolities about to begin. There are evening coats of many materials, among them chiffon, velvet, satin, and broadcloth playing no inconspicuous part. They are made up in extremely picturesque effects and lavishly trimmed with wide bands of fox on the collar and cuffs. The high collar is the thing, and fur is the chosen material of the day. And if colds and coughs and general ill health prevail from so much overdressing, the wearer will at least have the compensation of knowing that they looked handsome while they were wearing it.

This is to be a season of long haired fur with fox reigning supreme and even ermine and the beloved skunk taking second place. Then, too, it might be interesting to know that the European house cat is being generally used for fur and is much more satisfactory than our own cats, whose fur does not wear so well nor make up so prettily. Those on the continent have a brownish color and are soft. Our Kolinsky fur, for instance, is really only Russian cat fur.

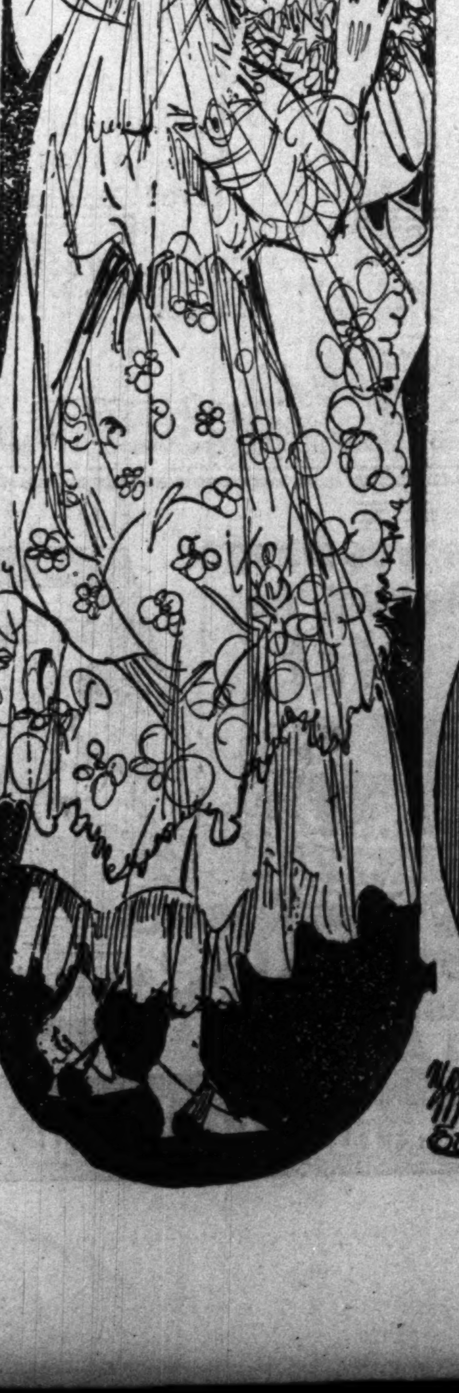
As yet there has been no appreciable shortage in black furs, but there is bound to come a shortage in the Leipsic dyes. Before the war started the dealers were well stocked in furs and of course it is still early in the season. But already the rumor has gone out that the time of shortage approaches and that when it does there will be a limit to the Breitswantz and caracul.

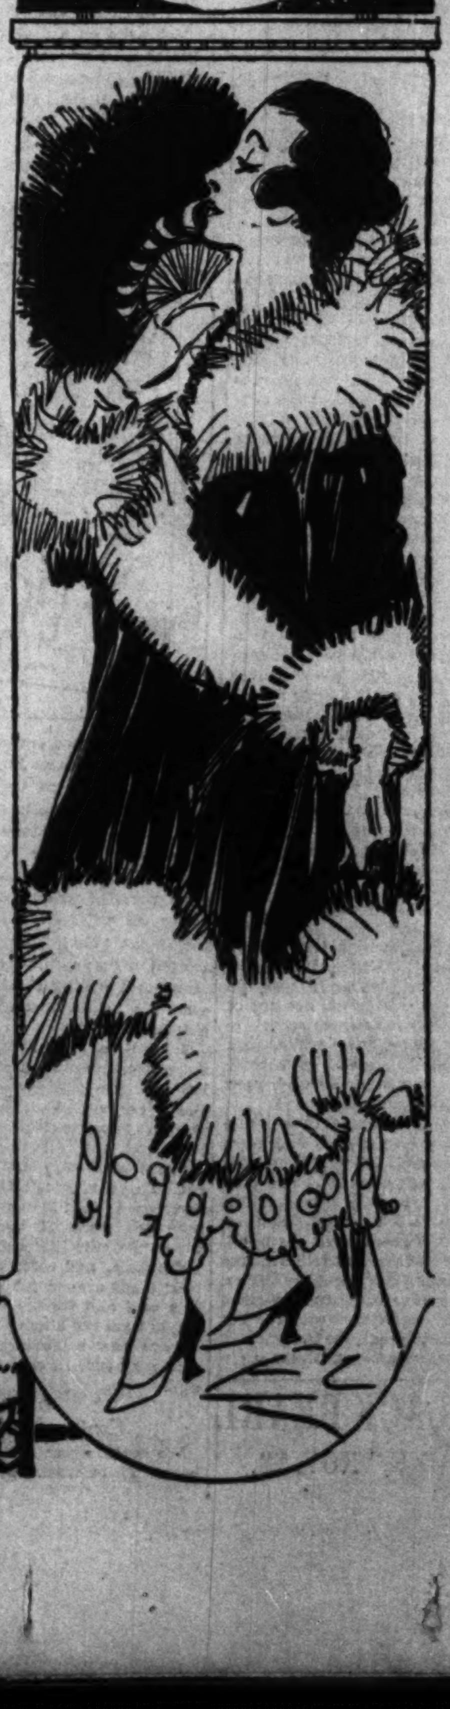
If the bride is going to remain in a cold climate, she could not do better than purchase a fur coat for the severe weather. Seal, lamb, and caracul are probably the most preferred furs for the purpose, but even they are trimmed with fox and with skunk in order that the long haired idea might be carried out. I have seen some stunning models of baby caracul which fall straight down from the shoulder to the hip and then at that point end with a circular flounce which is banded with skunk.

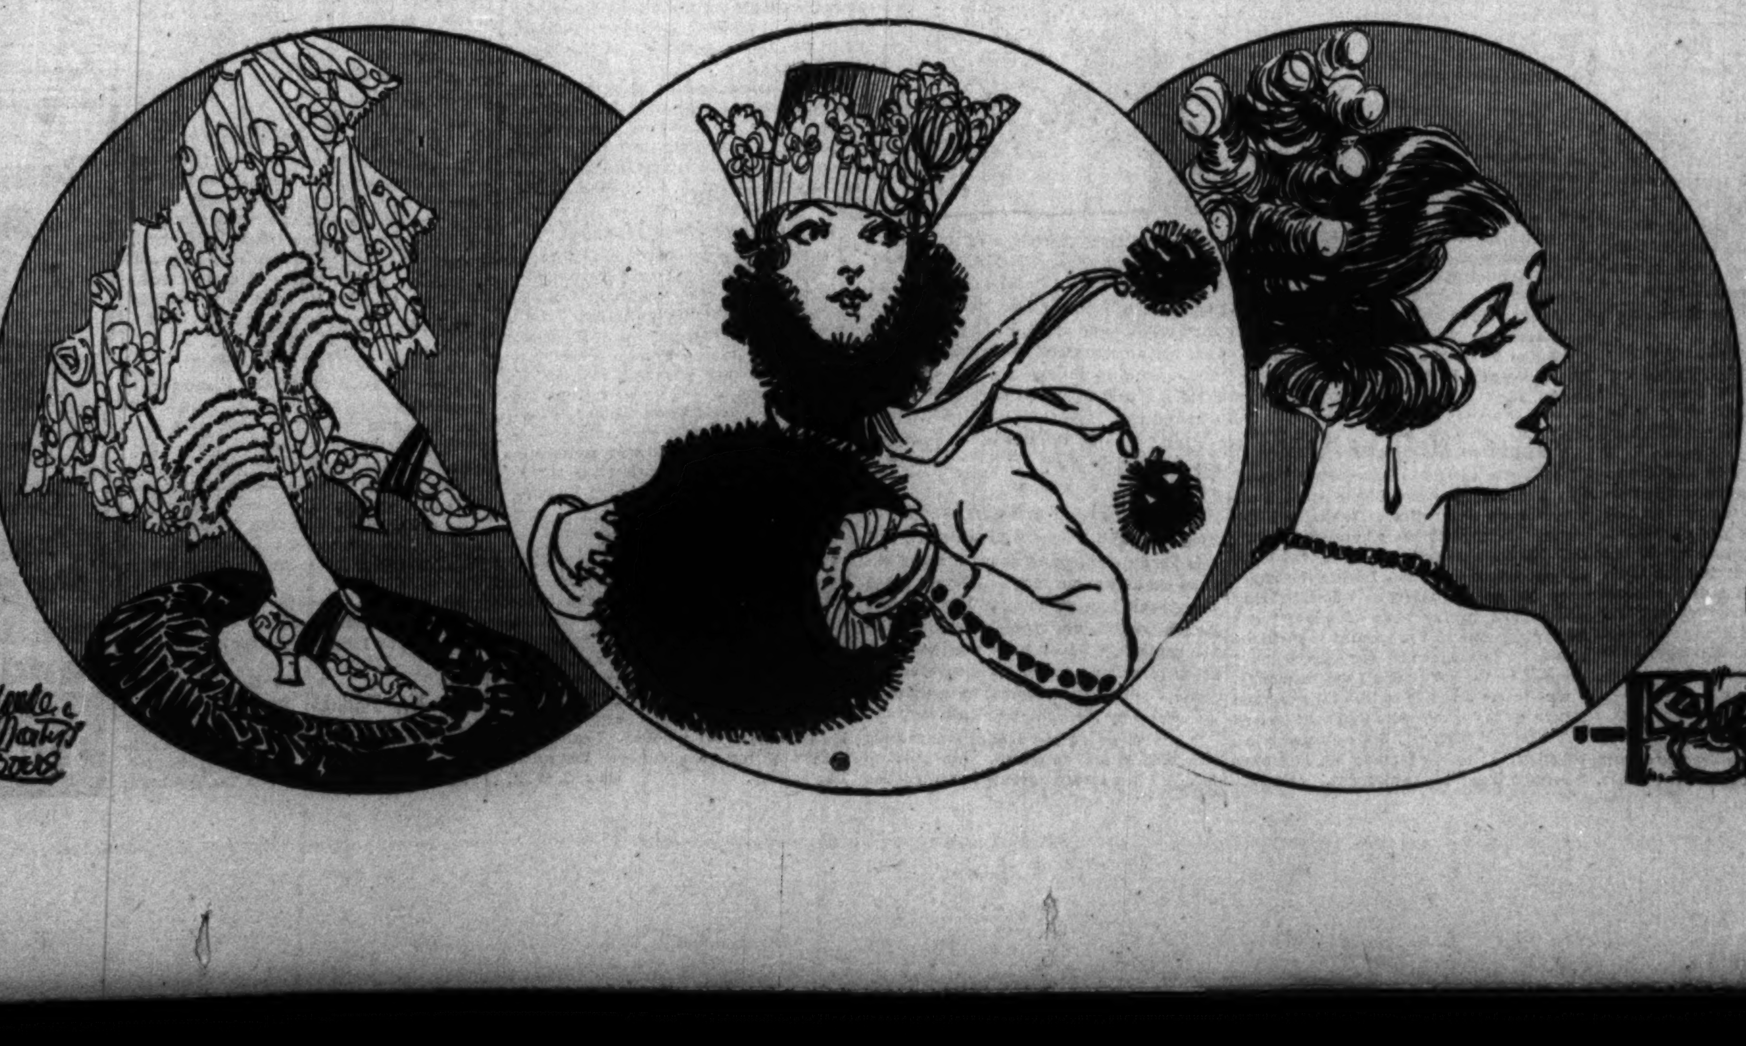
If the bride is choosing a muff, she should remember that they are both round and flat, although the former are the most generally preferred. Fox skins and every skin near or distantly related to fox is popular. Ermine for evening wear can never lose its place in favor and sable is always fashionable.

When you buy a magazine you expect to get the full benefit of the money you put into it. You put it aside after finishing one story with the intention of reading other stories in it when you have the leisure. THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE is, besides a great newspaper, several magazines rolled into one. It is a hard job to read it thoroughly at one sitting. Consequently it is a good plan to save it throughout the week in order to read during leisure moments those articles and stories you have not time to read on Sunday.

The garments shown on this page are all appropriate to be included in the trousseau of the winter bride. A pussy willow silk frock, fringe trimmed, and flaunting to the four winds a chiffon cape and sleeves, would be suitable for many a festive occasion, while the wedding frock is of ivory white Georgette satin, also fringe decorated about the hem of the skirt, with a bodice which is trimmed with lace and cords of silver. There is a front panel of lace and the underbodice and sleeves are of chiffon. The veil is of exquisite oriental lace. Of course the stockings of ivory white silk are trimmed with diminutive ruffles of the same silk, the fur muff is small and round and the hat above it is trimmed with gold lace handsomely embroidered. The new coiffure shown boasts curls piled on curls and the evening coat of velvet is fairly inundated beneath its load of fur. The three-piece suit above it is of velvet, fur trimmed and lined with handsome striped silk.







MEN AND WOMEN

THE fear of being bored is the root of all evil. How we do pull things out of joint just for excitement, excitement! Wonder if we shall ever learn the great truth that each wave of mental and emotional excitement means simply driving a nail into our own coffins?

Making Housework Easier for Farmer's Wife.

Is it the call of the city that the farmer's daughter hears? Or is it just a plain rebellion at the prospect of a life of joyless drudgery from rising time to bedtime, robbing both body and heart of youth and making an old woman of her at 30 or 35? Uncle Sam says the average farmer's wife lifts a ton of water a day in her household duties. He also says that $250 would supply a pump which would save many a woman from premature old age? Perhaps Father Farmer, with his mortgage all paid off and his barn stocked with every labor saving farm implement and a neat balance in the bank, might find a little food for reflection here.

Family Skeletons on View.

My word(But the way family skeletons are exposed to public view in this season's evening dresses is, to put it mildly, startling!

I'm not a Puritan in any sense of the word. But I must confess to a gasp or two at the feminine disclosures as being demonstrated in the grand opera audiences this season. I used to think a woman was a more lovely thing to feast one's eyes upon in evening dress than in an afternoon or street costume. But those were the days when only women with lovely arms and necks and shoulders submitted them for public inspection. Not so today, however!

Mayhap 'tis a working-in-candy-shop disgust that filled my otherwise democratic soul with the poor little rich girl's mad obsession to keep from the public as little of herself as possible. And mayhap it was because the disclosure so often failed to justify the unmaidenly exposé by its many pounds of excess or painfully meager avoirdupois.

At any rate, charity is not the password for the onlookers at these near Psyche pageants. And family skeletons, being no treat, should be kept covered up as much as possible.

Torturing the Anti-Opera Man.

"George, you're simply impossible. You don't even try to enjoy it."

This remark, heard at grand opera opening night, recalled to my mind the story of the country woman who brought her small son to town to see the sights. They went to the opera. The little fellow fell asleep. His mother shook him. He stayed awake for a small part of the next act, but the call of Morpheus was much sweeter music to the small boy's ears than that of Brunhilde. And sound asleep he went again. This time his mother shook him violently and said in angry tones: "Henry, you're going to enjoy this whether you like it or not. I paid $3 for your seat."

Why in the world do wives insist upon dragging the "tired business, anti-opera" species of male to opera and force them to the mental, physical, and dress suit torture of four hours of something they have absolutely no taste for? These men wouldn't dream of forcing their wives to sit and listen to a three or four hour business discourse, now, would they?

Four hours of grand opera, if a constitution finds it indigestible (as many perfectly good constitutions do), is considerable of a sacrifice. Instead of finding fault with the poor man and trying to force distasteful notes down his throat, thank goodness he is business man and moneymaker enough to allow you the privilege of going. For there are many, many women who would be full of gratitude for the price of a gallery ticket.

Child Needs Shield of Optimism.

Every child needs the shield of optimism to face the world. To deprive him or her of it is to commit a crime. Optimism is the most useful asset to have through life. But ever so many children are deprived of this asset in their own homes. The home life of a child will influence it in after life more than any other thing in the world. It will learn from its early environment pessimism or optimism as the case may be.

It is unfortunate for the optimism of the world that so many mothers imitate the renowned Atlas and stoop their shoulders not only under their own private woes but beneath those also of the outside world, instead of getting a little happy-go-luckiness into their otherwise sensible composition.

The happiest children—little and grown up—in the world are invariably the offspring of a mother with a gay and sunny disposition. A woman, therefore, owes it to herself, to her husband, and to her children not to take life and its troubles too seriously.

Fussiness.

I think on the whole fussiness is a feminine trait. However, a perverse fate does sometimes graft a fussy nature on to a man, and when it does he is an unbearable creature. He is regarded as—well, not a regular man—an exception, to the rest of his sex.

But fussy women do abound in plenty. In fact, they are so numerous that I get a panicky sort of fear I may develop into one myself. Fussiness is like the measles and I'm afraid of catching the complaint. It is so fatally easy to become fussy.

Some women fuss over their children's health; they fuss over their clothes; they fuss when they are playing indoors and fuss more if the youngsters are out of sight. And if they take them anywhere they fuss over them some more, with the result that the children become querulous and the mother wears herself out with no good result to any one.

Then some fuss because they really haven't anything else to do. This form of fussiness centers around the individual herself. Her own comfort and convenience become the only things of importance in her world. Home, clothes, and health—she fusses over them all. And the consequence is that folk who like a rational, peaceful life avoid her. It's a great pity. Because these fussy women are often really splendid characters. Yet they don't get any credit for it.

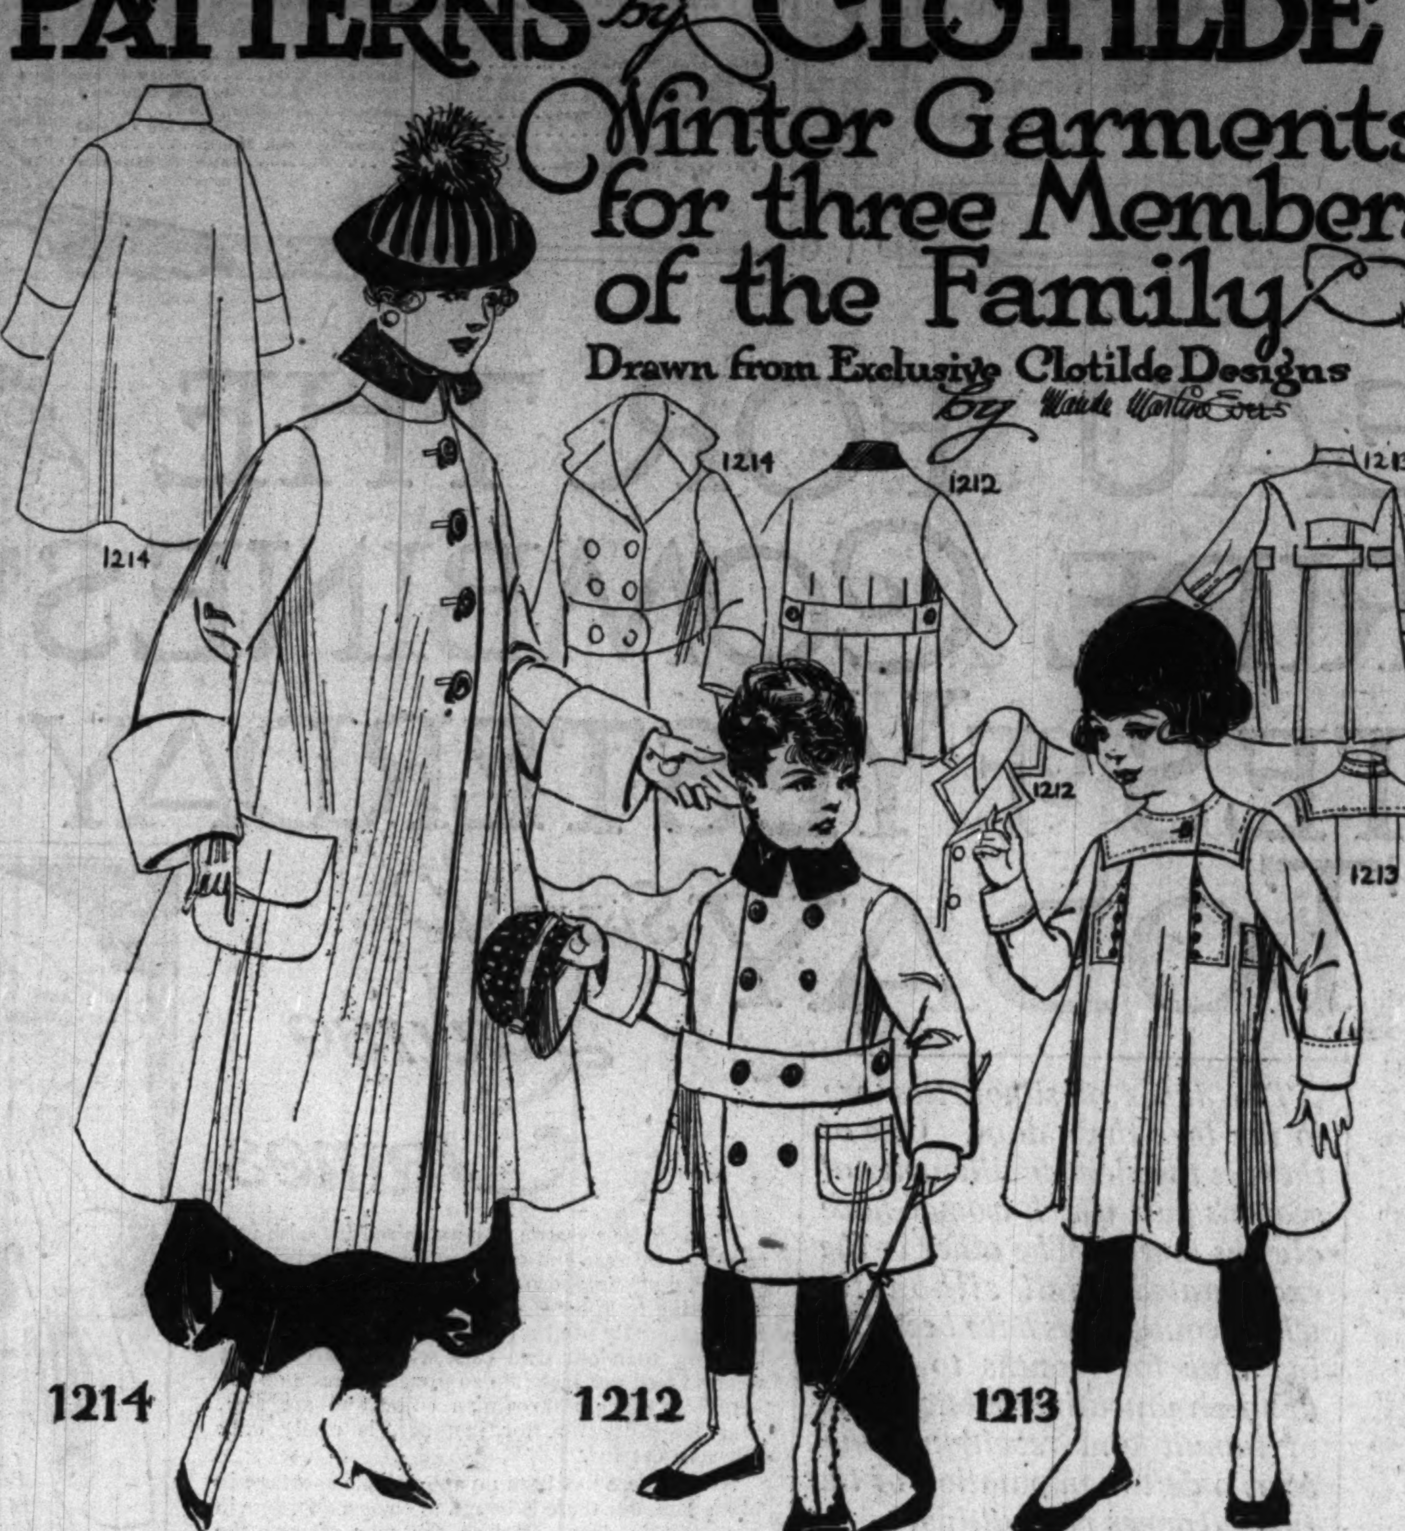
Drawn from Exclusive Clotilde Designs by Maude Martin Evers



1212—Boy's overcoat, 2 to 8 years. For the 6 year size will be needed 2¼ yards of material 36 inches wide, 2 yards 44, and 1¾ yards 54 inches wide.

1213—Child's frock, 2, 4, and 6 years. For the 4 year size will be needed 2⅝ yards of material 36 inches wide or 2¼ yards 44 inches wide, with one-half yard 27 inches wide for the trimming.

1214—Loose coat, 34 to 42 inch bust, with or without belt. For the medium size will be needed 4½ yards of material 36 inches wide, 3¾ yards 44, or 3 yards 54 inches wide, with three-eighths yard 27 inches wide for the collar.

THIS is what might be called a season in coats. The European custom of wearing a dress with a long coat over it is more and more being adopted in this country, and the likely cause of its increasing vogue is the increasing attractiveness of the coats in question.

A coat suits such a variety of occasions that women cannot dislike it, either, from its essential usefulness. The one which I am offering today in pattern form is an especially handsome model and especially serviceable from the number of materials in which it can be made up.

Cheviot cloth is a sensible material, and so are any number of the coarse, heavy goods. The thinner materials would make up prettily into this model in case it was not needed for extremely cold weather.

In the case of the patterns shown today for the younger generation the styles are extremely smart and up to date at the same time that they are simple and so easily made as to be attempted by any needlewoman. A coat for the small boy and a dress for the small girl are both opportunities for the prudent and wise parent. The children for whom these garments are intended have not yet reached the awkward age, and in their making they cause no trouble or embarrassment.

How to Order Your Clotilde Patterns.

In ordering a waist the size should be determined by the bust measure. Give the bust measure. In ordering a skirt the size of the hip is more important than the size of the waist, but give both the hip and the waist measure. Ten cents for each waist, coat, or skirt.

In ordering misses' patterns the age should be stated—12, 14, 16, or 18 years. Ten cents for each waist, coat, skirt, or dress.

In ordering children's regular patterns order them by the age of the child. Ten cents each.

Clotilde's patterns are made in New York exclusively for THE CHICAGO SUNDAY TRIBUNE and may be obtained through no other service. It is requested that customers allow one week before making complaint for nonreceipt. An extra 2 cent stamp will allow for letter postage and thereby hasten delivery.

Were You Ever Broke?

Were you ever broke—so broke that you didn't know where your next cent or your next meal was coming from? If so, tell the humorous or sorrowful aspects of your case and how, after getting broke, you "mended" yourself. The Tribune will pay $1 for every letter published on this subject. Keep your story within 250 words, write on only one side of the paper, and address communications to Broke Editor, Chicago Sunday Tribune. No manuscripts returned.

Such a Cute Girl!

About two weeks after the Omaha tornado I found myself stranded in the above city. I had been working South Dakota and Nebraska on a book proposition out of Chicago. I was crew manager. We had hard sledding and one man left me in Yankton, S. D. and the other left in Columbus, Neb. I wrote the house and asked for money to get out of town, but the house told us to get out and go to work.

Well, I left their sample cases and books with the hotel in Columbus, also my watch, and a good one, too. I finally got to Omaha. I was walking down Farnam street about 9 a. m. with 20 cents in my pocket and nothing in my stomach. In fact, I guess my stomach thought my throat was cut, for there hadn't been much of anything going that way for some time. I was thinking what I had better do with so much money when the cutest young lady I had ever seen caught my eye. She was crossing the street and coming right to me and in her arms she held a beautiful bunch of carnations.

So I thought me for her. As she stepped up on the curbing I raised my hat very nicely and said, "How do you do." The cute little lady said, "Good morning, don't you want a carnation to help out the tornado sufferers?" I thought of the 20 cents and nothing to eat. I said to myself if any tornado sufferer needs that 20 cents worse than I do here she goes. I took my carnation, which the cute litle lady had put in my buttonhole, and atfer walking the town over I got a good job as a dish washer in a café and for the first time in many weeks I got the kinks out of my stomach.

I am now a traveling salesman, been with my house three years, and am doing well.

Contemplated Suicide.

We were worse off than we had ever been. There wasn't a cent in the house. My husband was lying dead drunk on the sofa. I was so tired of trying to make ends meet. It seemed that I had come to the end of my hope.

My eldest daughter was 10 years of age, while the little one was 7. The eldest had gone to visit a little friend for an hour or so. I was out in the yard with the youngest and being almost desperate I looked at the cistern. We walked over and looked in it. I thought "If Mary was only here I would throw the children in and jump in myself and end it all." Just then the little one took hold of my hand and said: "O, Mother, you wouldn't let me fall in there, would you"

That brought me to saner mind and I took her with me to the front porch, where we sat down, thinking surely there was some other way. In a short time the postman came with a letter inclosing $1. I was so thankful; never had a dollar looked so large to me and I never had one that brought so much cheer.

Shortly after, through friends, I secured a good position and made a home for myself and little ones.

Didn't Stay Broke Long.

A number of years ago I was in New York City, a stranger without a cent. It was not generally known then that shine could be removed from clothing with emery paper or fine sandpaper by rubbing the shiny surface. I showed this to a chance acquaintance one day and he invested $2 in emery paper which we cut into pieces three inches by six inches and went over into New Jersey and sold them for 5 and 10 cents apiece. In two weeks I had $25 and I have never been flat broke since.

Broke in Heart and Purse.

I visited a little country town not long ago in company with a young man. I always made a practice of taking a little money along with me wherever I went, but this particular day I neglected to do so (much to my sorrow). Late in the afternoon we had a quarrel over some trifling matter and in the heat of anger I left the young man and proceeded to go home alone. Imagine my surprise when I stepped on the car to find I had no money. I was broke and had to leave the car and return to my friend who was waiting and ask him for carfare. We returned home together, kissed and made up, and have "being broke" to thank for it.

How I Have Kept Young.

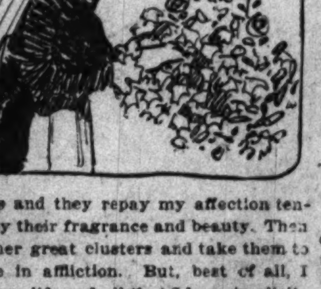
"The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published on how to keep young. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. Address Antoinette Donnelly, "The Sunday Tribune."

Life in the Sunshine.

At the age of 74 I am constantly being told how young I look. I attribute my youthful appearance, under Providence, to a life out in the blessed sunshine and fresh air among my flowers. I hoe around my beautiful rose bushes, train the vines, and occasionally mow my pretty lawn myself.

I love my flowers almost like human beings and they repay my affection tenfold by their fragrance and beauty. Then I gather great clusters and take them to people in affliction. But, best of all, I trust my life and all that I have implicitly to my precious Savior's keeping and his companionship in joy and sorrow comforts me and lights up my countenance with peace.



Then I live by the side of the road and am a friend to man.

Taken for Sisters.

I am 36, and I have a daughter 17, and it is hard to make new acquaintances believe that I am her mother. Every place I go I hear the same thing: "You look like sisters—you do not look old enough to be her mother." Many have positively refused to believe she is my daughter, because I look so young, and have thought we were only trying to fool them.

It affords us a great deal of amusement—especially my daughter. She likes to take me in a strange crowd and introduce me as her mother just to see the looks of surprise and hear the exclamations of astonishment.

How have I kept young? Simply by refusing to grow old. I keep myself dressed, not in the height of fashion, but always trim and neat. I comb my hair becomingly and take time to curl it. I go to parties and play and sing with the younger people. I walk a great deal and swim; get up picnic parties on the beach or in the woods, and have parties in our own house.

I am in the open air a great deal. I do not know if my way of living has kept me young or if old Father Time has just forgotten to mark me with the passing years. Anyway, I expect to stay young as long as I live.

Keeps Herself Human.

I think I may say without undue conceit that I have kept myself young. A stranger would take ten years from my age without intending to flatter.

I have merely taken care of myself. For years I have devoted a few minutes each day to my physical, mental, and moral condition. I have spent much time in keeping myself human and have permitted myself no idle moments in which to brood over supposed wrongs done me. I find the greatest youth giver is "humanness."

Has a Hobby.

I am 61 years old and feel as young as though the figures were reversed. I find that it is better to eat to live and not to live to eat. I eat plenty of fruit and vegetables and plain foods. Seldom any cake or pie or sweets. I am studying Spanish and expect to study something as long as I live—there is nothing like having a hobby to keep one young. Studying languages is my hobby. I can run and play with my grandchildren just as they like to play.

For and By BUSINESS GIRLS

Mary King.

Miss King will be glad to help business girls solve their problems. If you want a personal answer send a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Address Miss Mary King, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago.

Doing the Christmas Shopping.

SEVERAL girls I know who have always let their Christmas shopping go until the last minute and then worn themselves out running around making belated purchases and spent more money than they had intended, have surprised me by announcing that they have already started their shopping for the coming Christmas. They have their lists all made up and have practically decided what they are going to give every one on the list, and point with pride to several names that have already been checked off.

Let us hope that this is an indication that most people are starting to make their purchases for Christmas in ample time this year and are not going to wait until a day or two before Christmas, as they have in other years. What a blessing it will be for the saleswomen in the shops if people are becoming more sensible about Christmas.

Business girls more than any one else should have consideration for their sisters who work in the stores, but I am afraid we are not always as thoughtful as we might be. Business girls are just as lax as any one else about Christmas shopping and help to make Christmas a time to be dreaded by the saleswomen.

Usually the people you hear say that they dislike having to shop for Christmas are the ones who deliberately put it off from week to week until it is almost too late and they have to rush madly around in order to accomplish what they want to do before the holidays. It is no wonder they do not like doing it. Those who have the real Christmas spirit should find selecting gifts for their relatives and friends a pleasure, but it is only the prudent ones who start early and allow themselves sufficient time to shop at their leisure so that they can get just what they want who get joy out of their Christmas shopping.

A friend of mine saves up for Christmas every year and makes it a rule not to buy a single gift until she has the sum she figures out she will need. When she has that sum in the bank, and not before, she starts out with her list. It makes no diffeerence to her if she has to wait until a few days before Christmas. She still feels she has to wait until her fund is ample for her needs. Her family laughs at her system and tells her she is foolish not to buy a gift at a time as she has the money for it, but they have not convinced her. When Christmas day arrives she is always a wreck and is never quite pleased with her selections. If she would only be sensible and instead of depositing money in her bank every week or every two weeks, would do as her family advises and buy one gift at a time, she would save herself a lot of worry and nerve strain and would be better satisfied with her purchases.

The girl who saves nothing out of her salary for her shopping is in a sad plight when Christmas comes. She either has to spend money she needs for other things or, goes in debt to buy her Christmas gifts. Each year she resolves to reform and to start several months before the next Christmas to set aside something every week for her Christmas fund, but somehow she forgets to do it and Christmas again finds her unprepared.

Before and After Marriage.

"The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published on marriage disillusions. Address Doris Blake, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." Write on only one side of the paper.

A Diplomatic Conductor.

My lover had always seemed the most thoughtful and considerate of men, and his plans for a honeymoon filled me with bliss.

At the time of our marriage, however, he decided that he did not wish to leave his work for so long a time as our proposed trip would take, so we went to housekeeping immediately; but his mind seemed to be preoccupied with his work.

In a short time we went home over Sunday. As it was our first journey away together, I suggested that we play it was our honeymoon trip and try to bring to reality one or two of our honeymoon air castles.

I thought my disillusion was complete when the conductor came to us and I found that my absent minded husband has purchased only one ticket, and somehow I could find no solace in the conductor's remark that it was a case of unusual devotion when a man bought a ticket for his wife and entirely forgot himself.

Has a Uoo at Home.

Years ago a friend of mine with his fiancée in company with my wife-to-be and myself were fond of visiting the zoo.

They married and remained in Chicago. We married and went to another city. Upon returning to Chicago a year ago I at once renewed the acquaintance of my old pal. Thinking to please I suggested going to the Lincoln park zoo.

"No, thank you," said my friend. "My eldest daughter does the kangaroo walk, my second daughter talks like a parrot, my son laughs like a hyena, my wife watches me like a hawk, the cook is cross as a bear, and my mother-in-law says I'm a gorilla. When I go anywhere I want a change.

It Was a Dreadful Shock.

As a lover my husband was the most extravagant spender—no gift too fine, no remembrance too costly. So when he returned from his first trip away after our marriage I opened his tribute with high hopes. It contained a package of yeast and a new safety razor. It was a dreadful shock to me then, but now I would be glad to get the yeast.

Blow to Her Self-Esteem.

In my girlhood days I had always been credited with a fair share of good looks and had had more than one chance to give up my maiden name.

Soon after wedding the man of my choice we were discussing rather doubtfully the wisdom of a cousin's marriage to a pretty girl. She was rather flighty and extravagant and that was why we were thinking he would perhaps regret his choice.

Imagine the blow to my self-esteem when my husband said, "Well, when I married you I didn't go in for looks."

O. K., Though Not Her Ideal.

I had always supposed that when I met my husband-to-be he would answer in every detail to the ideal I had created. The name of my ideal was Tennysonian; my husband's name made me laugh when I first heard it. My ideal was slim; my husband is fat. My ideal had dark, liquid eyes filled with adoration for me; the reality has keen, blue eyes, full of "speculation," that laugh with and at me. But in truthfulness, faithfulness, and in the beauty of their children the ideal and the real are one.

EVEN CROSS, SICK CHILDREN LOVE SYRUP OF FIGS

Look at tongue! If feverish, bilious, constipated, take no chances.

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver, bowels.

Don't scold your fretful, peevish child. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with sour waste.

When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache, indigestion, diarrhoea, give a teaspoonful of "Californa Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul waste, the sour bile and fermenting food passes out of the bowels and you have a well and playful child again. Children love this harmless "fruit laxative," and mothers can rest easy after giving it, because it never fails to make their little "insides" clean and sweet.

Keep it handy, Mother! A little given today saves a sick child tomorrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50 cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Remember there are counterfeits sold here, so surely look and see that yours is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup. —Advertisement.

Doris Blake Says

If you were born this week you are Infallible.

> Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care "The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped and addressed envelope.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

SAGITTARIUS or the Archer is the governing force of those fortunates who were born during this week, and true to the name you are a clever marksman, one who usually aims well and hits the mark in all matters. Because of this characteristic you have prophetic powers and can tell the outcome of almost any enterprise right from the start. You rarely make a mistake if you follow your own inspirations but are sure to be led astray if you rely upon the advice of others. In games of skill, such as shooting and fencing, when a good aim is required, you excel. Also is this true of your sarcasm shafts which invariably hit the opponents' weakest spots.

You are busy from the day of your birth and insist upon the same energetic disposition on the part of those associated with you. Although you are exceedingly active in your own affairs, you do not trouble with those of your neighbors. You mind your own business and also keep your own secrets.

You have a strong will and do not like to acknowledge that you ever make a mistake. Fortunately you are more often right than wrong, and so the world gains the impression that you are infallible, which is more true in your case than in almost any other sign.

You can earn a dollar while the other fellow is deploring the need of one; in other words, you are a natural born "hustler." In all money matters you are careful and saving, though not penurious, but in the end you will probably amass a fortune, not in speculation but cautiously and wisely. You shoot your arrows far ahead, but do not wear yourself out trying to keep up with them.

"Your motto might be "Touch me not." For, though quiet and apparently mild, once your pride is offended your biting shafts dart out on the enemy and rout him completely.

More than one thing on your hands at a time distresses you, for you are distinctly a person of one thing at a time. You throw your whole force into whatever you are doing to the absolute exclusion of everything else, and so that is why you so often succeed. This intense application is liable to bring on a nervous irritability which will cause you to fly to pieces over trivial matters and frequently cause trouble in the family.

For your own peace of mind, make it a point to be morally sure of every statement you make, else more than once you will be accused of fabricating.

You expect too much of others. Just because you are so quick to observe, to plan, and to do is no reason why you should expect this from others. You must learn to make allowances for those who are less gifted.

If a woman, you'll be a fine housekeeper, an excellent wife, and a judicious mother. Neatness with you is a virtue and disorder of any kind makes you positively unhappy. Both men and women of this sign love children and animals.

Some of our best musicians have been born in this sign, and whether or not this talent is cultivated it is there. This being an occult sign, you turn naturally to the more spiritual side of life. Hand in hand with this tendency is a devoted love of home. The love you give your helpmate is the highest, most ideal kind, and your greatest desire is to create a beautiful home atmosphere.

Successful occupations lie in these fields: Soldier, surgeon, lawyer, teacher, singer, and actor.

Your colors are red, green, and gold; birthstones, turquoises and diamonds. You are apt to be most fortunate during your own sign, but may have some bad luck during the week beginning June 27.

Your most harmonious union will be with your opposite pole, Aries, March 22-April 20. Congenial friends and marital companions will be found in Aquarius, Jan. 21-Feb. 19, Libra, Sept. 24-Oct. 23, and in your own sign.

He Must Wait to Marry.

"My Dear Miss Blake: I am again coming to you for a little advice. Some time ago I wrote to a young lady living in Washington, D. C., asking her to marry me. Not hearing from her after a few days, I wrote again, saying I was sorry if I had insulted her or hurt her feelings.

"Shortly after I received a letter from which I quote in part: 'Indeed you did not insult me, nor were my feelings hurt by asking me to marry you. I was surprised, but agreeably so. I am sorry, but I cannot ac[illegible] for two reasons: First, I do not lov[illegible]; in fact, I do not know whether I do or not; I do not love any one. However, I like you as well as any one, but that is all I can say at this time. In the second place, I am still in school, and I promised mother that I would go this year and graduate. But if you feel the same next year I would be able to answer you then. You know that you are as apt to change as I am.'

"Any advice that you may give will, I assure you, be appreciated, as writing to a girl is not like being near her. Thanking yo[illegible] your past courtesy, I remain, F. J. K."

Well, what do you want to do? Seems to me that you ought to be mighty happy to have received such an encouraging note, and I would say that the girl was an exceedingly sensible person. Take my advice and let well enough alone; just keep corresponding with her and wait for next year. I prophesy good luck.

Her Love Plays Cards.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am much in love with a young man. This man is getting into bad company, and plays cards quite frequently. Is there anything I can do to make him break away from these boys? Shall I give him up? He is very nice otherwise, and seems to love me dearly. Will you please advise me

"SNOOKS."

Learn to play cards and have him play with you at your own home. The playing in itself isn't wrong; it's the company, I judge. Don't think of giving him up on this account. Do what you can to get him away from this company.

About Introductions.

"Dear Miss Blake: When introducing a gentleman and lady, which name should be mentioned first? Is Fountain a boy or girl's name?

Always mention the woman's name first when introducing a man and a woman, but if introducing two women the older one should be given the preference. I judge the name Fountain is a family one and so could be applied to either a boy or a girl.

He Spurns Her.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am in love with a boy two years older than I. He used to love me, but I do not know what is the matter. I wrote to him and he told me not to write. I love this boy dearly and wish to win his love back. I am not a pretty girl. I am very lonesome without him. I can't study my lessons. Can you please tell me of any way I can win him back or not? I would like to know.

"VIOLA."

Little, lonesome girl, dry your tears and get down to business on those books. You must get this "winning back" business out of your head. When a fellow has clearly shown by his actions that he does not care for you it is beneath your dignity as a well bred girl to make any effort to further pursue the friendship. Make yourself forget him and you will find in due time that there are plenty of other joys in the world.

She's Beginning Young.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a girl of 14. Is it proper for me to exchange rings with a boy about my age and dance a straight program with him at a dance?

"GWENDOLYN."

No, decidedly no, it is not. If I could be any more emphatic I would, but I hope the very brevity of this answer will have the desired effect. Never think of exchanging jewelry at your age. And it is equally bad form to dance a straight program with one man.

Sunshine of Her Life.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a young girl and dearly love a young man two years my senior. We have been going together two years. During all of that time he has only asked to kiss me twice, which I refused. If I have any girl friends over he seems to take more pleasure in their company than in mine and will ask them to kiss him good-night, while when we are alone he treats me very nice and shows by his actions he seems to think a lot of me.

"Is he try[illegible] make me jealous when in company o[illegible] girl friends, or doesn't he care for me? He has given me quite a few presents, such as bouquets, candy, books, etc.

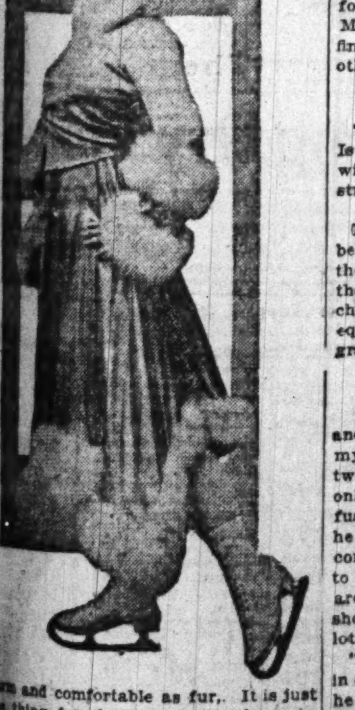
"It would break my heart to part with him, as he is the sunshine of my life. He comes to see me three or four times a week. Will I give him up and forget him?

"ETHEL M."

The every fact that he does treat you with such respect is sufficient proof that he thinks more of you than of the girls who allow those liberties, so quit worrying your little head. When the time comes he will ask you to marry him, and until he does you are pursuing the right course, and don't you let any one else tell you to the contrary. Don't think of giving him up.

Kid for Newest Skating Costume.

A SKATING costume of glazed kid is destined to be one of the fashion favorites of the coming winter season. No need either to account for its popularity except on its own indisputable merits. For cloth to be heavy enough for warmth is necessarily cumbersome, and kid, which is soft and supple as satin is at the same time as warm and comfortable as fur. It is just the thing for the woman who loves to skate, to coast, or to walk about in the winter snows.



The accompanying illustration shows the jaunty jacket and the short flaring skirt bound with fur. The hem of the skirt is high enough to permit easy indulgence in any kind of outdoor sport, while the high laced boots fitting snugly about the calf and the ankles, the tiny toque, and the marrel muff complete the costume.

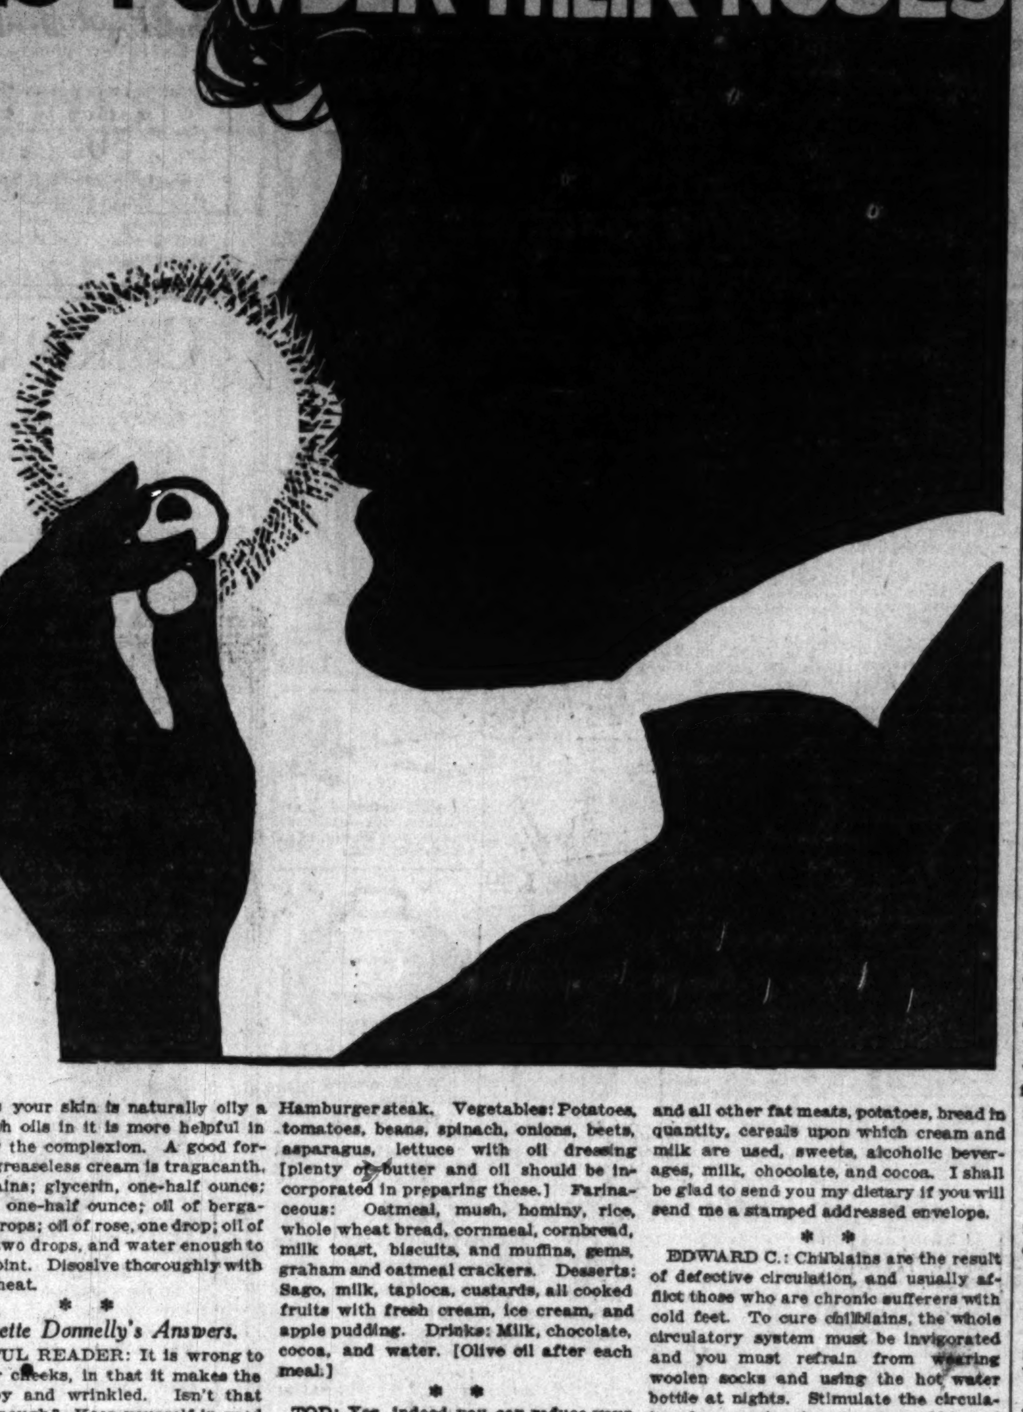
WHY GIRLS POWDER THEIR NOSES



By Antoinette Donnelly

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

WHY do girls powder their noses? For the simple and feminine reason it makes them more attractive! Which is reason enough for any girl to powder her nose.

A greasy skin is neither nice to possess nor nice to behold. A nose, being in itself a conspicuous feature, should be toned down if any toning down will reduce its conspicuousness, which makes another reason for powdering a shiny nose.

There is no reason to believe that the moderate use of cosmetic powders is harmful to the skin. On the contrary, they furnish protection against the ravages of wind and sun. Unless your skin is greasy or you use powders in combination with greasy applications, there is practically no danger of clogging the pores with a moderate use of good powder.

You want to be sure, however, that your powder cosmetics contain no lead, mercury, or arsenic. Though bismuth is not as dangerous unless there is an abrasion in your skin, it is just as well to leave alone cosmetics containing this ingredient. In time it has an injurious effect.

White lead is deadly poison to the skin. Making powders at home is not a successful operation, generally. They must be smooth, and without the druggist's utensils it is difficult to get them smooth. A simple formula and a good one is boric acid one part and talcum nine parts. Another good formula for powder is boric acid one part, starch four parts, talcum five parts. Perfume as you desire. Liquid powder bought without thought as to what it contains has greater danger, as a rule, than the powdered form. It is put up primarily to bleach, and for that reason unscrupulous dealers are apt to put into their formula deadly ingredients.

But first, before you consider the matter of powdering your nose, you want to be sure that the skin under the powder is clean, with closed pores. Blackheads settle on the nose more than on any other part of the face, and no amount of powder will cover up these ugly little black spots.

Blackheads are masses of fat and débris which have become hardened in the glands and clogged up the pores. Extreme cleanliness in bathing the face is the only way in which the unsightly blemishes may be removed. The vigor with which you scrub the skin must be determined by the condition of the skin. If your skin is thin and dry, use a pure castile soap in warm water, as you must be careful not to make the skin too dry. If the skin is thick and greasy, you cannot scrub it too thoroughly. Once a day use the green soap treatment until you have gotten rid of the blackheads. Green soap, by the way, is not green at all but amber in color and is in the form of a jelly paste. Do not use the tincture of green soap on your face.

First wash your face in water as hot as can be borne, using the complexion brush and green soap. Rub the soap on the face until a free lather is secured. Rinse in hot water and then apply more soap with the complexion brush. Then rinse in clear warm water, follow this by rinsing in cold water, and apply benzine (not benzoin) to the face with a piece of absorbent cotton. Let it remain on the skin for about five minutes, then massage the skin with cold cream for a few minutes. Wipe off the superfluous cream. In the morning rinse your face in as cold water as can be borne. If possible, go over the face with a small piece of ice. Cold water and ice will contract the pores and stimulate the circulation of the blood better than any astringent wash.

The following formula makes an excellent cleansing cream: Two ounces oil of sweet almonds, one-quarter ounce of spermaceti, one-quarter ounce of white wax, one-half ounce of rose water, one dram of boric acid. Melt the oil, spermaceti, and wax together at a moderate heat. Then gradually add the rose water, in which the boric acid already has been dissolved. Stir the mixture briskly and constantly until it is cold. Continue the stirring until it has become soft and creamy. It should be about the consistency of butter and free from any rancid odor.

Some people prefer a nongreasy cream, but unless your skin is naturally oily a cream with oils in it is more helpful in preserving the complexion. A good formula for greaseless cream is tragacanth, eighty grains; glycerin, one-half ounce; boric acid, one-half ounce; oil of bergamot, five drops; oil of rose, one drop; oil of lavender, two drops, and water enough to make one pint. Dissolve thoroughly with moderate heat.

Antoinette Donnelly's Answers.

FAITHFUL READER: It is wrong to pinch your cheeks, in that it makes the flesh flabby and wrinkled. Isn't that harmful enough? Keep yourself in good health and you will not find it necessary to pinch your cheeks to make them rosy. Five feet five inches is not too tall for any girl. It is the nature of some girls to be taller than others. However, 110 pounds is much too little for a girl of that height. She should at 16 weigh 125 pounds. Your writing is fairly good for a girl of your age, but it can stand improvement.

REBA: To remove crow's feet or laughing wrinkles place the ends of the second and third fingers firmly on the temples then knead deeply upward toward the forehead. Before you begin the massage cleanse your face with a good cleansing cream or with a complexion brush, a pure bland soap, and hot water. I shall be glad to send you my formula for cold cream if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

X. Y. Z.: There is no way you can reduce the size of your face. If you work at your face to reduce it you are liable to make the flesh soft and flabby and wrinkles will form. You ought to be thankful indeed that you are in good health and have a round, plump face glowing with health and vigor. The white spots on your nails are caused from lack of care in manicuring. Be careful not to raise the cuticle. The air gets under, takes away the nutriment, and causes the white spots. I shall be glad to send you my instructions for care of the nails if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

MISS MABEL S.: I can give you a good dietary for gaining flesh. Here is the one I recommend: Soups: Bean, rice, barley, celery, asparagus, mutton, clam, or chicken broth. Meats: Fat bacon, ham, roast beef or mutton, lamb chops, sweetbreads, sausage, squab, and all game, and Hamburger steak. Vegetables: Potatoes, tomatoes, beans, spinach, onions, beets, asparagus, lettuce with oil dressing [plenty of butter and oil should be incorporated in preparing these.] Farinaceous: Oatmeal, mush, hominy, rice, whole wheat bread, cornmeal, cornbread, milk toast, biscuits, and muffins, gems, graham and oatmeal crackers. Desserts: Sago, milk, tapioca, custards, all cooked fruits with fresh cream, ice cream, and apple pudding. Drinks: Milk, chocolate, cocoa, and water. [Olive oil after each meal.]

TOD: Yes, indeed you can reduce your bust without taking any medicine, but you must be faithful in practicing the exercise which I give you. Any vigorous exercise that involves the muscles of the chest will help to reduce the bust and one of the best of these is swimming. The breast stroke swimming movement may be practiced on land as well as in water. Stand with the feet about eighteen inches apart and with the arms bent at right angles and hands back to back, shoot the arms directly forward, inclining the whole body forward. Then sweep the arms and hands outward in a horizontal plane, extending them back as far as possible without straining. Even more important than exercise is the diet. I shall be glad to send you my dietary for reducing if you will send me a stamped addressed envelope.

L. I. G.: Writing to me about your weight is not a strange subject at all but only a natural one. You did not tell me how tall you are, so of course I cannot tell you how much you should weigh. A girl of 16 who is only 4 feet 11 inches in height should weigh 111 pounds, so you see whatever your height ninety-nine pounds is much too little to weigh. I should think it would be well for you to add a few pounds more to your weight, for I am sure you would feel better and stronger. I am inclined to think your friends are right in "dinning" at you to get stouter.

BEATRICE: This is an excellent formula for dry shampoo: Two ounces of fine cornmeal and one ounce of powdered orris root. Shake well together. Then shake or sift into the hair. Let it stay in the hair about ten minutes, then brush thoroughly until every particle of the shampoo is removed. The powder takes out the oil and dust.

BELLE: This is a simple exercise for reducing fat legs: Stand up straight and kick out with each foot in turn, bending so as to draw the heel of the foot back as far as it will go. Repeat the exercise from fifteen to twenty times a day. If you are serious about reducing your flesh you will have to give up fat producing foods. It will take will power, you know, to give up the things you are most fond of. Among the fat producing foods are butter, cream, olive oil, bacon, fat pork, and all other fat meats, potatoes, bread in quantity, cereals upon which cream and milk are used, sweets, alcoholic beverages, milk, chocolate, and cocoa. I shall be glad to send you my dietary if you will send me a stamped addressed envelope.

EDWARD C.: Chilblains are the result of defective circulation, and usually afflict those who are chronic sufferers with cold feet. To cure chilblains, the whole circulatory system must be invigorated and you must refrain from wearing woolen socks and using the hot water bottle at nights. Stimulate the circulation by exercise, by vigorous rubbing of the feet, and by proper diet. You can relieve the suffering by rubbing the affected parts with snow or putting on ice cold applications. Tincture of iodine, tincture of chloride of iron, and tincture of camphor are all soothing and healing.

MARGARET V. R.: Go right on using the green soap for your face. It will not cause more blackheads to form. This is an excellent formula for skin food: One ounce of white wax, one ounce of spermaceti, two ounces of lanolin, two ounces of coconut oil, four ounces of oil of sweet almonds, four ounces of orange flower water, and one-quarter of an ounce of boric acid. Melt all the oils and wax in a double boiler; remove from the fire and beat until cold, adding slowly and gradually the orange flower water, in which the boric acid has been dissolved. Lastly, pour in five drops of benzoin. Be sure the ingredients are fresh and of the best quality.

A READER: To cure acne, you must get rid of blackheads by vigorously scrubbing the face daily with warm water and a good soap—preferably green soap, if your skin can stand it. After squeezing out the pus that forms in the acne lesions apply a drop of peroxide. This will keep the spots from getting red. Try massaging your face each night with a good skin food, and I am sure in time you will be able to remove the little scars. The best blood purifier you can take is fresh air, exercise, plenty of sleep, and a careful diet. Drink lots of water. I shall be glad to send you my formula for enlarged pores if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

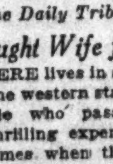
WORRIED: It is nothing to be worried "just to death" over, for I am sure the breaking out on your back is caused from indigestion. That is probably what makes your nose red, too. You will have to be careful about your diet and eliminate the things which cause you distress and discomfort. Get exercise in the open air. Avoid all fried foods and guard against constipation and I am sure it will not be long before you will see a decided improvement. Give up the use of coffee, if you can. If not, drink it but once a day and do not have it strong.



Real Love Stories

Bought Wife from Indians.

THERE lives in a small city in one of the western states a happy old couple who passed through many thrilling experiences during those times when the west was in the making. The old man is fond of relating these experiences, and he often tells of how he found a wife among the Brule Sioux, who were at that time the most restless and troublesome of the plains Indians.

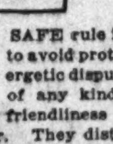
At the close of the civil war this man was about 22 years of age and of an adventurous nature. He went to St. Louis, Mo., where he fell in with a party of traders bound up the Missouri river to barter for buffalo skins with the Indians. The venture was successful, and after a year spent in the wilderness the party started back, their flat boats loaded with the baled buffalo hides.

One evening the party stopped for the night near an Indian encampment, and here the young man met what he considered to be the most beautiful Indian girl he had ever seen. She was apparently about 20 years of age, and although she was dark complexioned and had beautiful black hair and eyes, she did not possess the features of an Indian. Anyway, the young man gave little thought to her nationality. It was a case of love at first sight, and although his companions resumed their journey the following morning, the young man remained to court the maiden, who it appears was the daughter of a chief. He won her hand and, according to Indian custom, paid the chief the purchase price of the girl.

The girl, according to the chief, was not Indian but of white parentage. She had been adopted by the chief when she was a baby, her parents having been killed by the Indians on one of their raids against the frontier settlements. Subsequent investigations proved the truth of the chief's story and eventually the girl was able to get in touch with many of her relatives in the east.

The young man took the girl to St. Louis, where she was placed under the care of a relative to learn the white man's language and ways of living. A year later the marriage took place. After a few years spent in the east they returned to the prairies, where they took up land and where they have resided happily ever since. J. B. G.



ETIQUETTE

by ELIZABETH VAN RENSSELAER

A SAFE rule in social intercourse is to avoid protracted discussions, energetic disputes, heated arguments of any kind. Even if begun in friendliness they are apt to end in rancor. They disturb social equilibrium and are especially full of peril in these days of intense emotions and fiery convictions.

One of the distinguished Belgian families, the De Croys, some branches of which belong to the mediatized nobility of Europe, makes such a point of poise and serene bearing that the invariable gift to each woman who marries into the family is a bracelet set with the words, "du calme," in precious stones—at once a reminder and an adornment.

Calm and contentiousness cannot exist in the same person. Cultivate the former and eschew the latter.

READER OF THE TRIBUNE: A woman usually walks on the right side of the man. The engagement ring is worn on the third finger [sometimes called the "ring finger"] of the left hand. The wedding ring is worn on the same finger. The engagement ring is generally worn next to the wedding ring.

E. C. B.: It is not necessary for a young woman to ask her escort in after a dance or theater party. In fact, if the family has retired for the night and the house is practically shut up it is not "good form" to do so. I think for the ages you mention—20 for the young woman and 27 for the young man—a chaperon is desirable in going to a theater or any public place. The chaperon can be some young married woman.

> Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elizabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply inclose a stamped, addressed envelope. Please write on one side of the paper only.

MRS. M. M.: For a newcomer in a place it is proper to express pleasure at a first call, but don't ask your visitor to come again soon until after you have returned this initial visit. This should be done within a week. If you use a luncheon set for your evening meal—doilies, centerpiece, and napkins—why not call the occasion "supper"? It is less formal in sound. A dinner is a more serious affair and presupposes a tablecloth and some ceremony. A supper is a genial festival and quite as it should be in a simple household.

JACK: You should certainly dance the first dance with the young woman you escort to the entertainment. If she is a stranger and has few or no acquaintances at the dance, it is your lookout to introduce eligible partners to her and to see that she has a good time. If she is as well acquainted as you, the necessity is not so pressing, though you are still in a measure responsible for it. If others at the dance are asking their partners to have refreshments at an "ice cream parlor," then you should offer the same refreshment to the young woman you are escorting. It is customary to say some polite word of thanks or appreciation after each dance to your dance partner. You must be your own judge as to the number of times you dance with the woman you escort to the ball. Be careful not to do it so often as to cause comment.

Doing the Dishes.

He was a young man, "batching it" at his brother's house while his brother and family went to the country. He disliked washing dishes, so used every dish that was clean, and on Saturday put them into a washtub, took them into the yard, turned the hose on them, and as he washed each dish put it on the grass in a sunny place to dry. When his neighbor's young daughter saw what he had done she said: "Well, you're just the kind of a man I want to marry." She is doing the dishes for him now, but in a more orderly fashion. L. S.

She Had Heard It Before.

At a Christmas party my sister, a man acquaintance of hers, and several other members of the party were having a game of riddles.

When this man's turn came he asked the riddle: "When will the alphabet have only twenty-five letters?"

My sister, having heard the riddle before, answered without thinking: "When U and I are one."

This led to their wedding some three months later. W. A. S.

Stunned by Her Quick Rejoinder.

A young woman and myself were seated in a theater one evening when I chanced to call her attention to a man walking down a nearby aisle by saying, "That's the man folks were so sure would be my father-in-law."

"Well, my dad's better looking," came the reply.

She said this so quickly that I didn't grasp the true meaning of her words, so did not accept her proposal. However, since then she has accepted mine. R. E. R.

He Exasperated Her.

John had been keeping company with me for four years, but not a tender word in all that time! I never thought of such a thing as giving him a hint until one day after dinner he exasperated me by saying, "I'm a lucky fellow—a good dinner, a good cigar, and good company. I haven't a thing in the world to ask for." I snapped out, "You'll have to ask for me if you want any more of my company," and ran up to my room. I did not come down next day when he made his usual call and he sent up this note: "Come down, Mary; I'm going to ask." And he did. M. L.

Took the Seeming Hint.

There was a social gathering at the parish house. My brother was sitting engaged in conversation with a pretty girl in a deserted corner of the room.

The elderly rector approached with a friendly greeting, when the girl looked up and asked pleadingly, "Won't you join us?"

"Eh, what is that?" queried the old man, leaning over.

My brother took the seeming hint and asked the question in a little different form and the date was set. C. C.

GIRLS! LOTS OF BEAUTIFUL HAIR

25 cent bottle of "Danderine" makes hair thick, glossy and wavy.

Removes all dandruff, stops itching scalp and falling hair.

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance, freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and luster, and try as you will you can not find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp. Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower, destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this.—Advertisement.

Bran Cookies

2 cups Pillsbury's Health Bran, ¾ cup Pillsbury's Best Flour, 2-3 cup milk, ¼ cup butter, 2 eggs, 2 tablespoons cream, 2 level teaspoons baking powder, and raisins if desired. Mix thoroughly and bake in quick oven.

There's not the slightest danger that these dainty, delicious cookies will upset your child's stomach. On the contrary, they are nourishing food and will help digestion and bring about better elimination.

Pillsburys Health Bran

not only is mighty good to eat but is the most dependable of laxatives. It never gripes like a drug; but the coarse flakes fairly scour out the intestines. Because of the secret sterilization process to which it is subjected, IT KEEPS.

Good housewives find it invaluable in making their cooking "different" and "individual."

Meeting a school chum one morning, I learned to my surprise that she was married and had two little girls. "Send them over tomorrow afternoon," I said impulsively. "I am giving a party for Jane, who is 5 years old tomorrow." The next afternoon, when I answered the bell, the incident of the morning before had entirely slipped my mind. There stood two little girls, the same size, dressed just alike, and hand in hand. "And who are you?" I asked. "Can't you see?" said one. "We're twins." MISS I. H.

Helen attended kindergarten and during the Thanksgiving season had stories about the Pilgrims and the Indians. Her mother, who had much pride of family, told her about her ancestors, who came over in the Mayflower. A few days later Helen came home with shining eyes and exclaimed. "O mamma, I told Miss Marshall what you told me about my great-great-grandmother and how she was a really, truly Indian." A. C. W.

Our little neighbor is always trying to pay pretty compliments. One day she spied my brother with a new suit and said, "O, Mr. Harry, what a pretty figure you have in your new suit." B. S.

On a railway coach I had been entertaining a litle boy whom I did not know. Finally, wishing to read, I gave him a paper and pencil and told him to write down his name and age.

"Shall I write my father's, too?" he asked.

Not attending, I nodded, and "Papa," called the little boy down the length of the car, "the lady wants to know how old you are." I. B.

My little niece, Gracie, was sitting on grandmother's lap. As she was rocking to and fro baby kept staring into her face, and after a few minutes of silence she said, "Grandma, you aren't so very new, are you?" E. E.

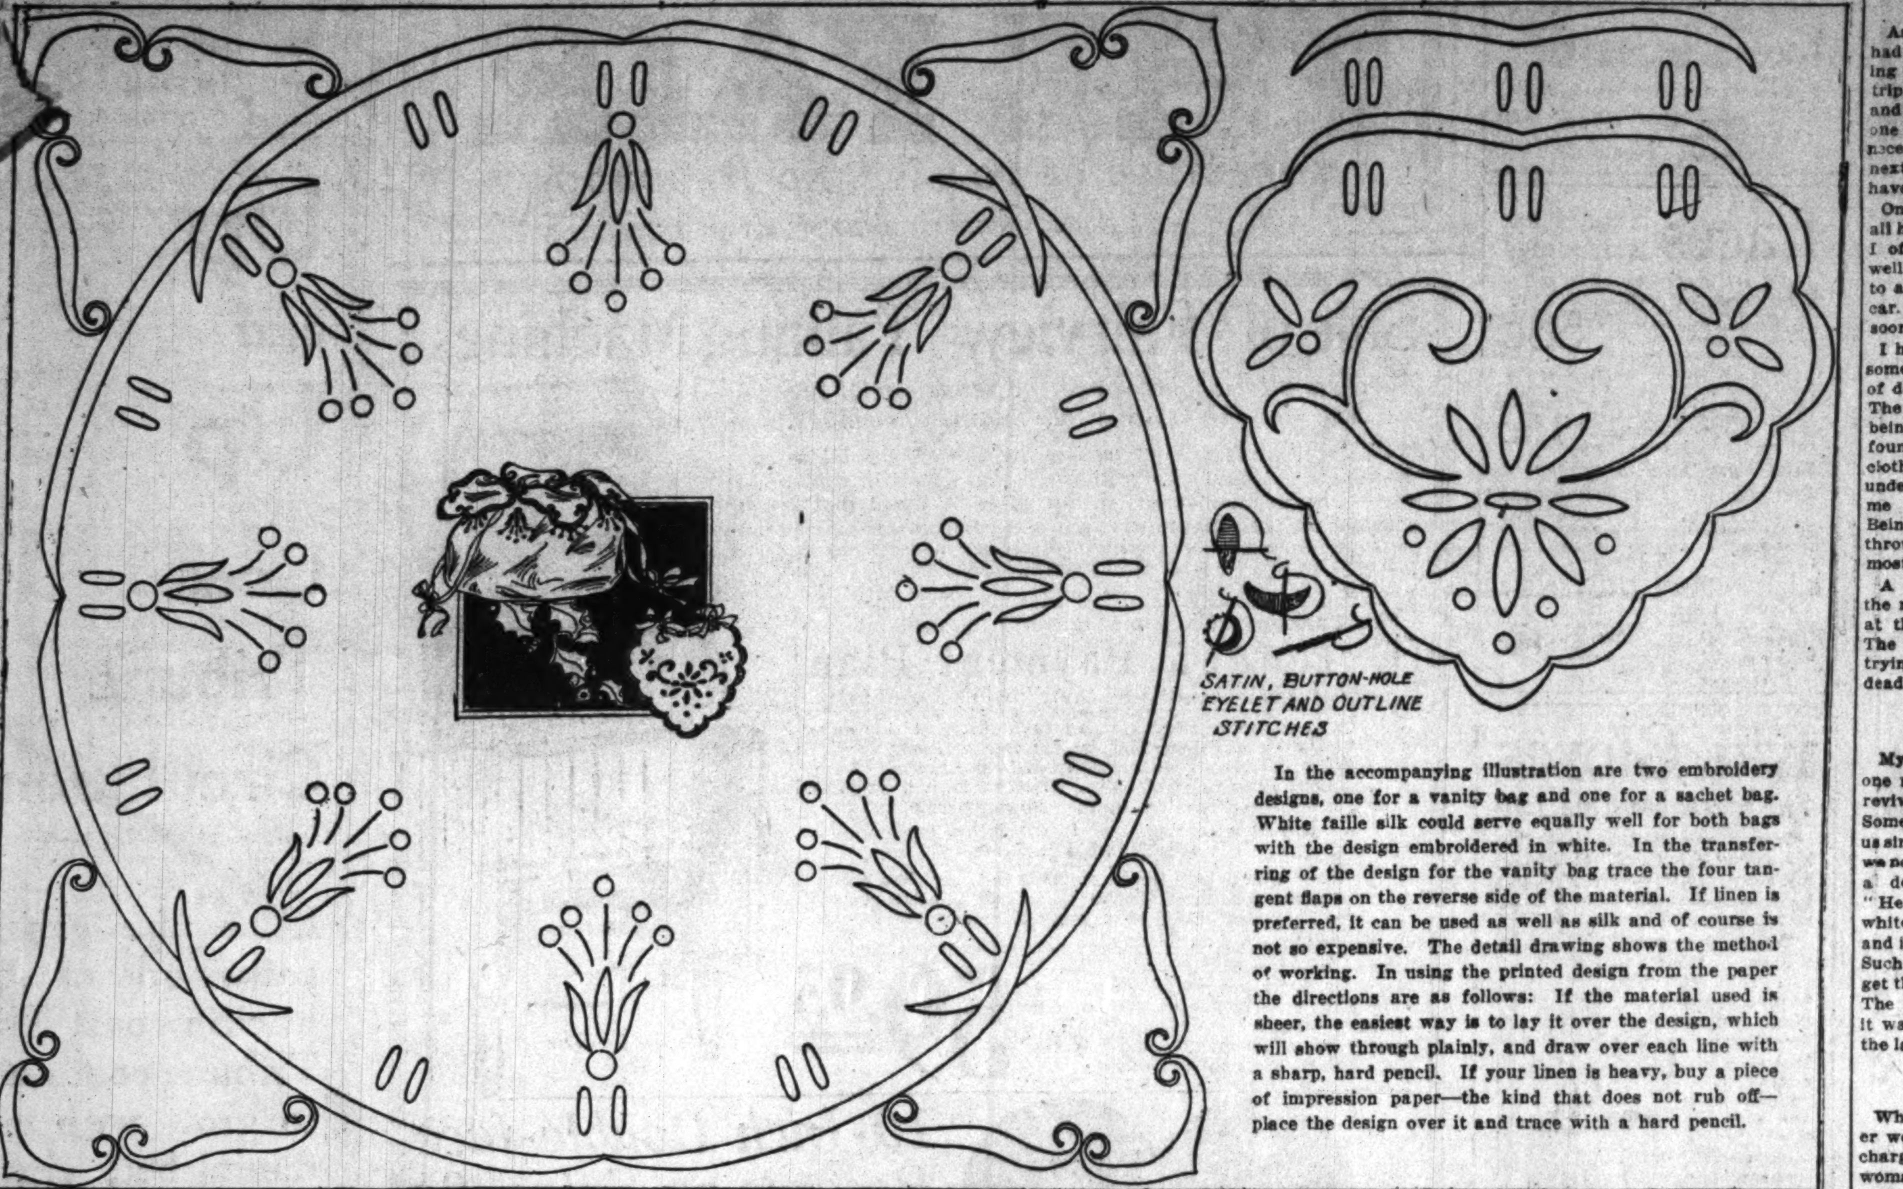
EMBROIDERY DESIGNS FOR VANITY AND SACHET BAGS.



SATIN, BUTTON-HOLE EYELET AND OUTLINE STITCHES

In the accompanying illustration are two embroidery designs, one for a vanity bag and one for a sachet bag. White faille silk could serve equally well for both bags with the design embroidered in white. In the transferring of the design for the vanity bag trace the four tangent flaps on the reverse side of the material. If linen is preferred, it can be used as well as silk and of course is not so expensive. The detail drawing shows the method of working. In using the printed design from the paper the directions are as follows: If the material used is sheer, the easiest way is to lay it over the design, which will show through plainly, and draw over each line with a sharp, hard pencil. If your linen is heavy, buy a piece of impression paper—the kind that does not rub off—place the design over it and trace with a hard pencil.

Took Him for Dead Man.

As a real estate man, years ago, I often had to make long drives, some times being on the road all day. The long, hard trip and fresh air made me very tired and sleepy. On returning home from one of thees trips I found it would be necessary for me to be in St. Paul the next morning, and in order to do so would have to take a very late night train.

On entering the sleeper I saw no one, all help seemed to be settled for the night. I often traveled on this train, and was well known, so felt free to help myself to an unoccupied berth in the end of the car. Being very tired and sleepy, was soon sound asleep.

I have a faint remembrance of hearing some one say: "Dead man in udder end of de ker, sir"—still I did not wake up. The next thing I knew I felt something being pushed over me. Opening my eyes found myself on a stretcher in my night clothes, with a sheet over me, with an undertaker and his helper trying to push me through the sleeping car window. Being a large man I would not go through. It is hard to tell who was the most embarrassed.

A man had died on the train during the night and his body was in the berth at the other end of the car from mine. The undertaker made a mistake and was trying to remove the body of the man—dead asleep. G. E. R.

In Flew the Dusty Miller.

My most embarrassing moment was one night when I was chosen leader at a revival meeting. The song was "Help Somebody Today." "Now," said I, "let us sing this chorus with all the enthusiasm we nossess." I opened my mouth big, took a deep breath, and started to sing "Help," but at that moment a huge white, flowery miller flew in my mouth and instead of "help" I shouted "hel——." Such clawing and gasping as I did do to get that miller out! The audience roared. The preached tried to look serious, but it was too amusing, and he, too, joined in the laughter. W. H. T.

Call Him Sissy Now.

When I was in the first grade my mother went away on a visit and left me in charge of a housekeeper. It was this woman's custom to put an old baby dress of mine over my suit instead of a napkin to eat lunch in.

One day she forgot to take it off, and I wore the thing to school.

My, how the boys did laugh at me! I have been called "sissy" ever since. ROBERT A.

Sister Slid Down Bannisters.

My sister was entertaining her beau one night, and, not knowing the two were in the house, I donned a pair of tights and began doing gymnastics. Finally my zeal led me to take a slide down the bannister, which was in full view of the parlor. It was pitch dark in there, and hearing a noise, I thought it was the cat and with a whoop sent my slipper flying after the culprit. A scream from sister and a masculine "ouch!" issued forth. Needless to say I fled, for the slipper had struck the gentleman straight in the ear. I can't tell which of the three was the most embarrassed. M. K.

Held His Hand.

It occurred one day when a friend and I were in a crowded trolley. I distinctly felt the hand of the man sitting next me feeling around between us, and I whispered to my friend, "That man has his hand in my coat pocket." "Grab it," she whispered excitedly. Both of us were thinking of pickpockets. I did so. Blushes and apologies followed. I had seized his hand in his own pocket. L. M.

The Tribune Cook Book

by JANE EDDINGTON

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

THE new idea in Thanksgiving eating is so to eat as to be thankful the day after. The best of the several possible leftovers from a Thanksgiving dinner is thankfulness that you respected yourself enough not to eat too much. The new idea for the Thanksgiving dinner cook is to prepare a menu that shall have all the inviting qualities of one three times as heavy, specifications for which latter sort are many. It is no compliment to the cook that the diners should have a feeling of painful fullness after dinner.

There are various ways of lightening what has come to be accepted as the conventional Thanksgiving menu; that is, one which may be served in five or more courses. To begin with, we may confine ourselves to the original viands. Originally neither soup nor salad was served although four or five vegetables did appear. These latter are filling, but do not burden, as equal quantities of more nutritious foods always do. It is not out of place to substitute a light milk soup for one of these vegetables, especially as after eating it the self-respecting person will refuse a second helping of turkey.

One of the most concentrated foods on the menu is the bread (this includes crackers). Leave that out of every course, and especially leave out the bread dressing, and the result will often be the same as dividing the actual nutriment of the dinner or amounts to be digested by two or even by three.

There can be no more sensible dish on the Thanksgiving menu than one of boiled onions. Squash or turnips or both are considered necessary, and an escalloped vegetable may take the place of the escalloped oysters, which were probably a semi-southern addition to the Thanksgiving menu. This may be either escalloped oyster plant (salsify) or, similar to it, eggplant cooked in the same way. The salsify is less expensive, but this may be used for the soup, in which case the repetition would be undesirable. The oyster soup, which is in good and regular standing among cooks for this dinner, adds a digestive burden which careful eaters will avoid.

Next to turkey pumpkin pie is the most characteristic dish of the day, but we may substitute a squash pudding for this and get much the same flavor, and when we go on to nuts, raisins, and fruits the pudding is the more harmonious and there is no pie crust to digest. A cup of black coffee at the end may save those who have eaten too much a great deal of trouble. It delays matters until the body can work itself up to accomplishing its prodigious task.

The carving of the turkey is the prettiest task of the table. There are as many ways of doing this as there have been great authorities, but one needs partly to be born to the task. There is just the difference between two carvers that there is between two eaters of half a broiled chicken. The plate of one will look as tidy at the end as at the beginning, while that of the other will have a crude and wasteful lot of débris on it.

Perhaps the best book on carving is now out of print. It is "Practical Carving," by Thomas J. Murrey, who was a true American epicure of a generation ago. At the end of his introduction to the book he says: "I have often heard my father say that a young man's education was incomplete without a knowledge of carving, and his sons had every reason to believe he was serious in what he said." He says that from his earliest recollections he was taught that a thorough knowledge of carving was important to education, and his struggles remain vividly in mind. "I could not see why," he says, "it was important that my thumb instead of the forefinger should be placed on the back of the knife when the latter way seemed more easy."

For the turkey he used a small knife and fork in addition to the large carvers. The head of the bird was placed from him. He cut two thin slices of white meat from the breast down to the shoulder before dividing the wing from it. He makes remarks about the "oysters" on the back which some people forget. His little book is one of the precious finds in the second hand book shop.

Oyster Plant Soup.

Cut off the green leaves and save the tenderest and finest for salad, and scrub thoroughly twelve salsify roots, then drop them into boiling water in which there are a few drops of vinegar. If they are not wilted you may then scrape or even rub off the skin after they have boiled for five minutes only. I have discovered this method, and much prefer it to scraping and slicing them without this preparation, as they do not turn dark readily after the boiling, and they do blacken so quickly raw.

After scraping off the skin slice and put to cook with a few dice of celery and one carrot sliced, covering them well with boiling water, which ought almost to cook away. When done mash and add one quart of boiling milk, a tablespoon of butter, and salt and pepper to taste. Cook for a few minutes—the liquid in which the salsify is cooked should be used—and strain. Put back some of the vegetable which will not go through the strainer to make it seem thicker, rather than add a flour thickening, which can be done, but this requires considerable extra cooking.

A little cream improves the soup and other flavors in small quantities may be used.

Escalloped Oyster Plant.

Prepare vegetable as for soup and boil till tender. Roll fine the same measure of crackers that you have of salsify. Put a layer of crackers in the bottom of a buttered earthen baking dish, then a layer of salsify, and bits of butter, and any seasoning needed, then crackers again and salsify, with crackers and bits of butter on top. If there is any liquid left from boiling vegetable add that, then sufficient milk additional to cover. Bake for thirty minutes in a rather hot oven.

Boiled Onions.

Silver skins are considered the handsomest for boiling, but they are more expensive than the yellow or red, and likely to be poor now. Whatever kind is used, do not cut off tops too closely, after removing paper skin, as the onion will then go to pieces more readily. Parboil ten minutes if the onions are rather large, then cook in boiling water or half milk and half water. Butter and a little cream make the finest finish.

Stewed Onions.

Stewed white onions are pretty, and are quickly prepared. Peel and slice and cover with cold water—in small quantities allow about a cup of water to each two onions. Bring slowly to a boil and boil ten minutes. Drain and put back into saucepan, with about a tablespoon of butter to each four onions. Stew in the butter five minutes, stirring often, and season. A large quantity will require a little more time.

Squash Pudding.

Steam almost any sort of squash until soft, put through sieve, and to each cup and a half of squash add one egg, a pinch of salt, and spices to taste. Beat till smooth and bake in individual buttered cups or in one large dish. Serve either hot or cold or with or without cream.

Pumpkin Pie.

The old fashioned pumpkin pie had more milk and more eggs than the pumpkin pie we know today. It had a custard like skin on top, instead of the rather rough surface on our present day pies. The following recipe makes an excellent squash pie, but pumpkin may be used:

Put two cups of squash or pumpkin through a sieve, add a pinch of cinnamon, ginger, salt, a grating or two of nutmeg, and from half a cup to a cup of sugar, according to taste, and mix. Scald a pint of milk, and if no cream is to be used in the pie add to the hot milk a tablespoon or even two of butter. Add the milk to the other mixture, and when the whole is cool add two well beaten eggs. Pour this filling into a deep pie tin lined with crust. A light puff pastry crust is best for this type of pie. Do not fill a crust so full that it will "slop" when putting it into the oven, but add the last of the filling after the pie is in the oven. Bake at least forty-five minutes in a rather hot oven, but do not allow filling to boil.

MARION HARLAND'S HELPING-HAND

by MARION HARLAND

This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

"I RECEIVED the letter you sent me about the tent. You have no idea of how proud I shall be to get the tent, so that I can be with my husband, and I thank you so much for your kindness in helping me to secure it. It was through the kind efforts of the Corner that I was successful in getting the tent. MRS. J. M. T."

I am glad to pass on these thanks to those who have helped me in procuring for this correspondent the tent she desired.

Invalid Wants Letters.

"If there are any of your Cornerites who would care to correspond with a young woman shut-in I would be glad to hear from them. I am 22 years old and have been ill almost two years. I have magazines which I would gladly give to some one and I also send my good wishes to your energetic Corner. C. B."

Surely there will be some one who would like to correspond with this shut-in. An appeal of this sort never goes begging. Also there will be requests for the magazines offered.

Would Correspond with Readers.

"Would some one from the west care to correspond with a girl? I would like to know more about that interesting part of our country and to hear from some of the readers of the Corner. X. Y. Z."

We have many interesting Cornerites who would be happy to get in touch with this girl and to exchange impressions of their different parts of the union. I hope he pleasantest sort of a girl or young woman may apply to me for the address of this Cornerite and that they may form a delightful comradeship by letter.

Daughter Is Musical.

"Have any of your readers a phonograph or graphophone to give away to a family? The daughter is musical and most eager for such an instrument. "F."

I print this application on the chance that some one may be able to send an affirmative reply to it. If such a one will write to me for the address this shall be supplied.

Wants a Discarded Violin.

"Has any one an old, discarded violin to give away? I would like much to have one so I could learn to play. I would pay the charges on it to our town. And as I have learned to do tatting and stenciling, could some one please send me some patterns? I would appreciate it, and perhaps some time I could do a favor for the giver in return. A. G."

Old violins for which their owners have no further use are not plentiful, I am afraid, and yet there is a chance that one may be looking for a possessor and may be sent to this Cornerite. Even if the violin is not to be had I think there is little doubt that patterns for tatting and stenciling are abundant enough to insure some of them going to A. G. I hold her address and will furnish it on application to any one who writes for it.

Tatting Patterns to Exchange.

Here are two letters which belong together:

"May I ask Gertrude V. H. through the Helping Hand for the tatting patterns she offers? I would be pleased to exchange patterns with her, and it may be that I have some which are not included in her samples. I will pay the postage. "MRS. A. D."

"I noticed in the Corner that Gertrude V. H. has some tatting patterns that she would send for the asking. I would be much obliged if she would forward them to me. P. M."

I am sorry that to both these applications I must return the answer that the tatting patterns have already been given elsewhere. Is there not some other correspondent with similar patterns that she would like to give or to exchange?

Request from Lonely Cripple.

"I have seen in the Corner the offer of some one to give away silk pieces and some old piano music. I am a cripple and cannot go out, and would feel thankful to receive these gifts. It is so lonesome. As an exchange I have some magazines I would like to give to some one whom they might cheer a little. MRS. L. W."

I wish much that this request had been accompanied by the name of the person who offered the silk pieces and the music, as without this I have no means of identifying the would-be giver. But is there not some one else who can supply the need of this crippled shut-in and cheer her by the silk pieces and the music she craves? I am sure both these articles must be in the possession of some one who would like to bestow them in a quarter where they would be appreciated and give a little zest to life.

Wants a Drum.

"I would like so much to get a trap drum for my brother. He is 14 years old and wants a drum so he can join a junior Y. M. C. A. band that has been started out here. Any boy can join if he has an instrument, and they get their lessons free. My brother thought he could get a drum this vacation, so he got work at 75 cents a day, but it was outdoor work and there has been so much rain that he did not earn much. My mother thought she could pay a dollar a week out of his pay and get him a drum, but I had my leg hurt and had an operation on it, and so we had a big doctor's bill to pay, so he cannot get the drum. He was so anxious for it, but now he never says a word, and I guess the poor child thinks he can't have it this year. I though some one of the Helping Hand perhaps had a drum to give away. "MARIE C. M."

I must acknowledge my ignorance as to exactly what a trap drum may be, but undoubtedly there are many of the Cornerites who are better informed. Among them I trust there is some one who has such a drum to bestow upon this boy who has worked so long and hard for one, only to be disappointed in the result of his efforts. I shall be happy to give his address to any one who can send him the drum. From his sister's letter the instrument should serve as a means of bringing the lad into desirable associations and providing him with an amusement and a resource which may prove of real benefit to him.

Blacking for Stoves.

"In response to the request of Mrs. R. L. S. I send the following: A blacking for stoves which we have used for years and found invaluable is made by mixing equal parts of kerosene oil and turpentine with a good stove polish. Make a paste the consistency of thick cream and apply to the stove when it is slightly warm. Polish with flannel cloth and you will have a bright and shining stove for months. Even on airtight heaters which often become red hot this polish will not burn off. An application of this polish before putting stoves away for the summer will prevent rusting. "MRS. L. J. S."

Mrs. R. L. S. will undoubtedly be glad to get this recipe and it will probably be welcome to others besides.

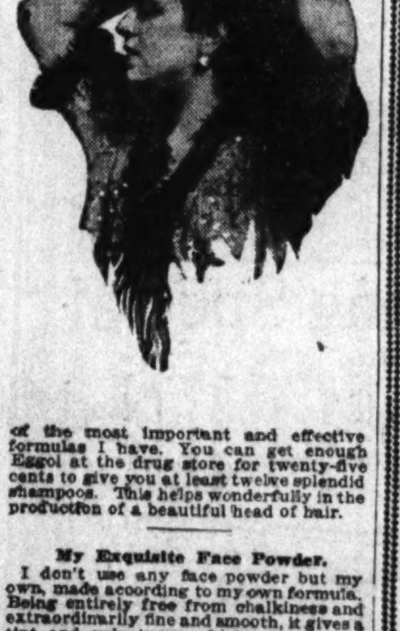
Pair of Crutches.

"If Mrs. F. F. will send to my address I will most gladly give her a pair of crutches. MRS. W. L. G."

Another response to an already granted request. Is there not some one who needs crutches and who will be glad to avail herself of this gracious offer? I will put the name of the correspondent on file.



Valeska Suratt Gives Secret for Hair Growth

I want every woman to get the benefit of my methods and formulas which have produced such splendid results.

THERE is only one thing among the dozens of things I have ever tried for the hair that produces results which you can actually see. The claims made for most of the hair tonics sold are very disappointing, as many women realize.

My own formula which I finally made up after many tests proved to be a very remarkable one. One of the best features about this formula is that it is in concentrated form, and by making up the formula yourself in a few minutes, you have several times the quantity which you would get by buying any of the ordinary already-put-up hair tonics—and, besides this economy, you have not a weak hair preparation but a powerful hair-forcer. You should soon notice a remarkable difference in growth, fluffiness and wealth of hair by using this formula freely and often.

Take a half pint of water and mix it with half a pint of alcohol (or else take a full pint of imported bay rum if you wish) and add to it one ounce of Beta-Quinol, which you can get at any good drug store for not more than fifty cents. After mixing thoroughly it is ready to apply. This makes a clean solution, and without any oil.

For a Faultless Complexion.

For beautifying the face, arms and hands, my formula has produced extraordinary results. It gives the skin a superb pink whiteness, removes all muddiness and spots in a very short time. In a few weeks your complexion should be almost perfect, with a bloom and freshness that is adorable. You must use this liberally every day. Mix two tablespoonfuls of glycerine in half a pint of hot water and add one ounce of Zintone while stirring. It will be ready to use when cooled. The Zintone can be secured at drug stores for not more than fifty cents.

Removing Blackheads.

My formula for removing blackheads has produced a real sensation. They may be removed in a few minutes by first washing the face, then sprinkling some Neroxin on the sponge, wet with hot water, and rubbing over the blackheads for a few minutes. Then wash the face again. The Neroxin can be procured for fifty cents at any drug store.

You Will Glory in My Shampoo.

Mere soap and water will not get the scurfy film which forms on every scalp. A good shampoo is necessary to hair health. Most shampoos simply make lather and do not sufficiently cleanse. Dissolve one teaspoonful of Eggol in half cup of hot water, rubbing well into the scalp and then rinse the hair. It is one of the most important and effective formulas I have. You can get enough Eggol at the drug store for twenty-five cents to give you at least twelve splendid shampoos. This helps wonderfully in the production of a beautiful head of hair.

My Exquisite Face Powder.

I don't use any face powder but my own, made according to my own formula. Being entirely free from chalkiness and extraordinarily fine and smooth, it gives a tint and velvetness which appears absolutely natural. You can obtain this face powder now at drug stores, and it is called "Valeska Suratt Face Powder." The price is fifty cents and it is put up in white and flesh tints.

Sure Remover of Superfluous Hair.

From my own experience hair on the lip, arms, hands, shoulders may be removed almost magically by simply applying on them some simple Sulfo Solution, which can be procured at any drug store for one dollar. It has the very remarkable effect of dissolving the hair. In a few minutes the hairs are all gone, leaving the skin soft, without the spot, burn or irritation commonly caused by the ordinary hair removers sold. It can be used on the most sensitive skin, and on heavy as well as light growths of hair.

I will send to any reader direct any of the articles named above if there is any difficulty in obtaining them from the drug store. In such case, send your name and address, enclosing the price, to the following address: Valeska Suratt, Suite 330, Thompson Bldg., Chicago, mentioning the articles you want, and I will see that you are immediately supplied.

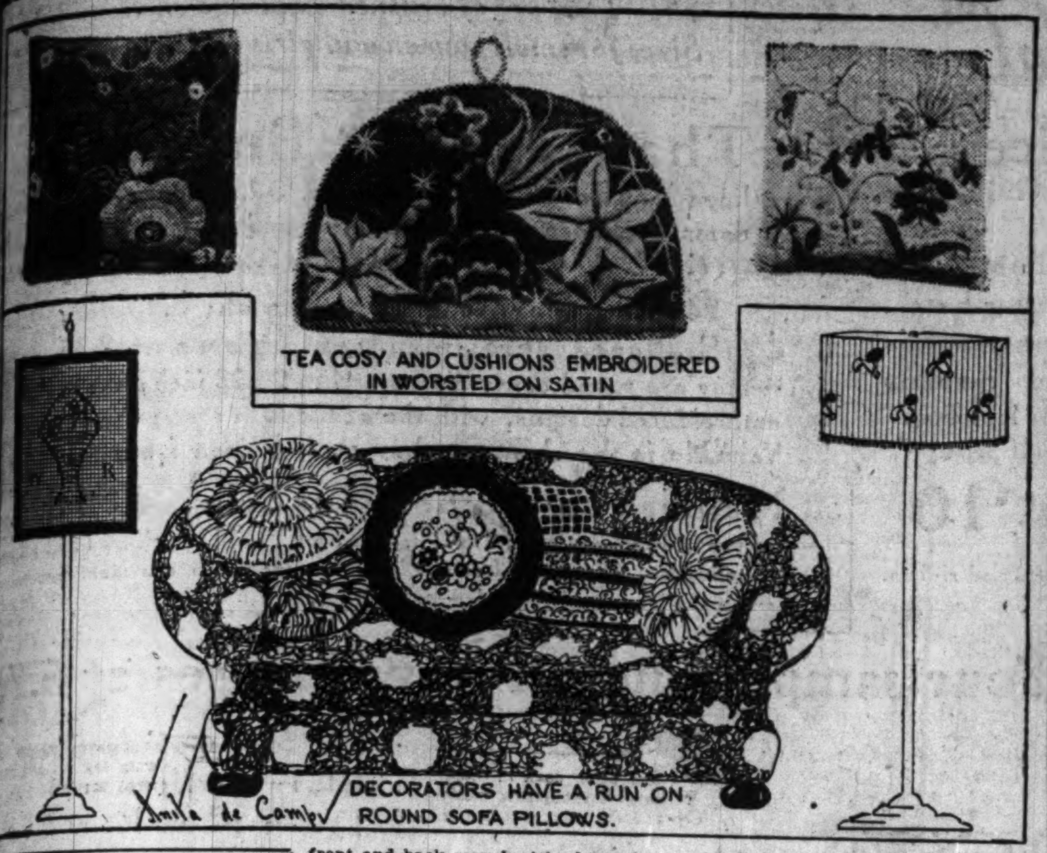
The Home Harmonious

Christmas Gifts for the Home

Anita de Campi



TEA COSY AND CUSHIONS EMBROIDERED IN WORSTED ON SATIN

DECORATORS HAVE A "RUN" ON ROUND SOFA PILLOWS.

Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to interior decorations. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

JUST at this season of the year apt feminine fingers are all busy fashioning beautiful things that will serve as Christmas gifts. The stores are filled with offerings. Many of the most interesting articles shown, while they may be far beyond the limits of the average purse, can be copied at small expense by any one who has—

Little money, little skill,
Some spare time,
And great good will.

In fact, the "great good will" is the chief perquisite. It is this that hovers about the gift, almost endowing it with lifelike personality like some mysterious aura.

The phrase, "I made this, dear, for you," carries with it a sense of the creative quality based upon love as all creative work is bound to be, a quality that is, you must admit, flatly lacking in the phrase, "I bought this thing for you."

Any one who can contrive a gift for the home has condensed gifts for the whole family into one. A few such articles suggest themselves that may form a small list to start with, and these will doubtless suggest to the reader others equally appropriate. The first things that come to mind are lamp shades, sofa pillows, fire or candle screens, sand bags for door stops, weather strips for windows, crocheted rugs, table covers, and tea coseys. Fashions change in all these things, so that the little peculiarities of the season mark them of this year's make.

The newest way of making pillows is to have them round and not large. They may either be round like bolsters, or round like fat little pancakes, but any sort of roundness is preferred to last year's square. The fact that one can hardly have too many pillows makes them acceptable offerings.

The painted furniture that is so much in vogue has had its bearing on the embroidery of the day. As much of the furniture that is painted is done in the Bavarian peasant style, the embroidery is made to correspond, and we find heavy worsted and bright crude colors taking the place of the finer needle work done with silk thread. There is no denying that the new style is daringly effective, and it must be said that on account of the threads being coarser and the colors laid in quite flatly instead of being finely shaded, the work is easier to do, and more quickly done.

The patterns preferred are stiff bunches of conventionalized flowers—the more "unnatural" they look, the better. The most popular material is heavy satin, as this is best calculated to get off the roughness of the embroidery. The embroidery may be done on the one piece that is to form the cushion, or it may be on a circular piece set into a larger circle.

A round of white satin set into a round or square piece of velvet is much in vogue. The velvet may be cut from beneath the satin and the cut out piece used for another cushion top or back. When an under piece is cut away in this manner it is always advisable to stitch the whole thing to a foundation of domestic, as it is apt to pull apart where the circles join unless it is so backed. Make a double row of stitching holding all together where the satin and velvet overlap. Cut the raw edges close and hide them under a tiny quilling of black satin ribbon. This idea can be carried out by any one who cannot embroider by substituting a circular piece of blocked linen chintz of cretonne for the satin inset.

The most popular cushion of the year, the sort that the best decorators have had a "run" on, are the shirred round ones like the end one on the sofa illustrated here. They are not embroidered and are easy to make.

As many as eight or ten of these pillows in varying shades, all made of thin silk, or even silkoline, are sometimes used on one sofa. They are thrown together in fine, carefully considered color schemes. If one is in partial shade all of the others must be also, or if one is in vivid red the others are bright blue, green, purple, yellow, and orange. Nearly always a single black one is thrown in among the lot. The touch of black is an emphasizing point, like a beauty patch on a pretty face.

This is the way to make shirred pillows: Select yard wide silk, or sew two breadths of silk together to form a square about a yard wide. Trim off the corners, shaping the piece round, then cut a round hole measuring twelve inches across, directly in the center. Now put shirring threads in, forming them in increasingly wide circles about four inches apart. Beginning at the cutout center, draw the hole tight together and tack it down to the center of a circular foundation. The foundation is a round piece of lining stuff measuring twenty-four inches across. Then draw all of the other shirring threads until the whole thing lies flat to the lining. Tack it down lightly here and there. The back is made in the same manner. The front and back may be joined together, with the raw edges turned in, and no trimming is necessary.

These cushions will not look well unless they are absolutely uniform in size, and they must harmonize in color and fabric.

Quaint are the fire and candle screens, often made of old-fashioned samples, framed and mounted on upright spindles. They have stops at the back, by which they may be raised or lowered.

Of all the gifts that are being made at home this season none is so much the rage as the round crocheted rug. Directions for making these rugs have already been printed in this column and will be mailed on request.

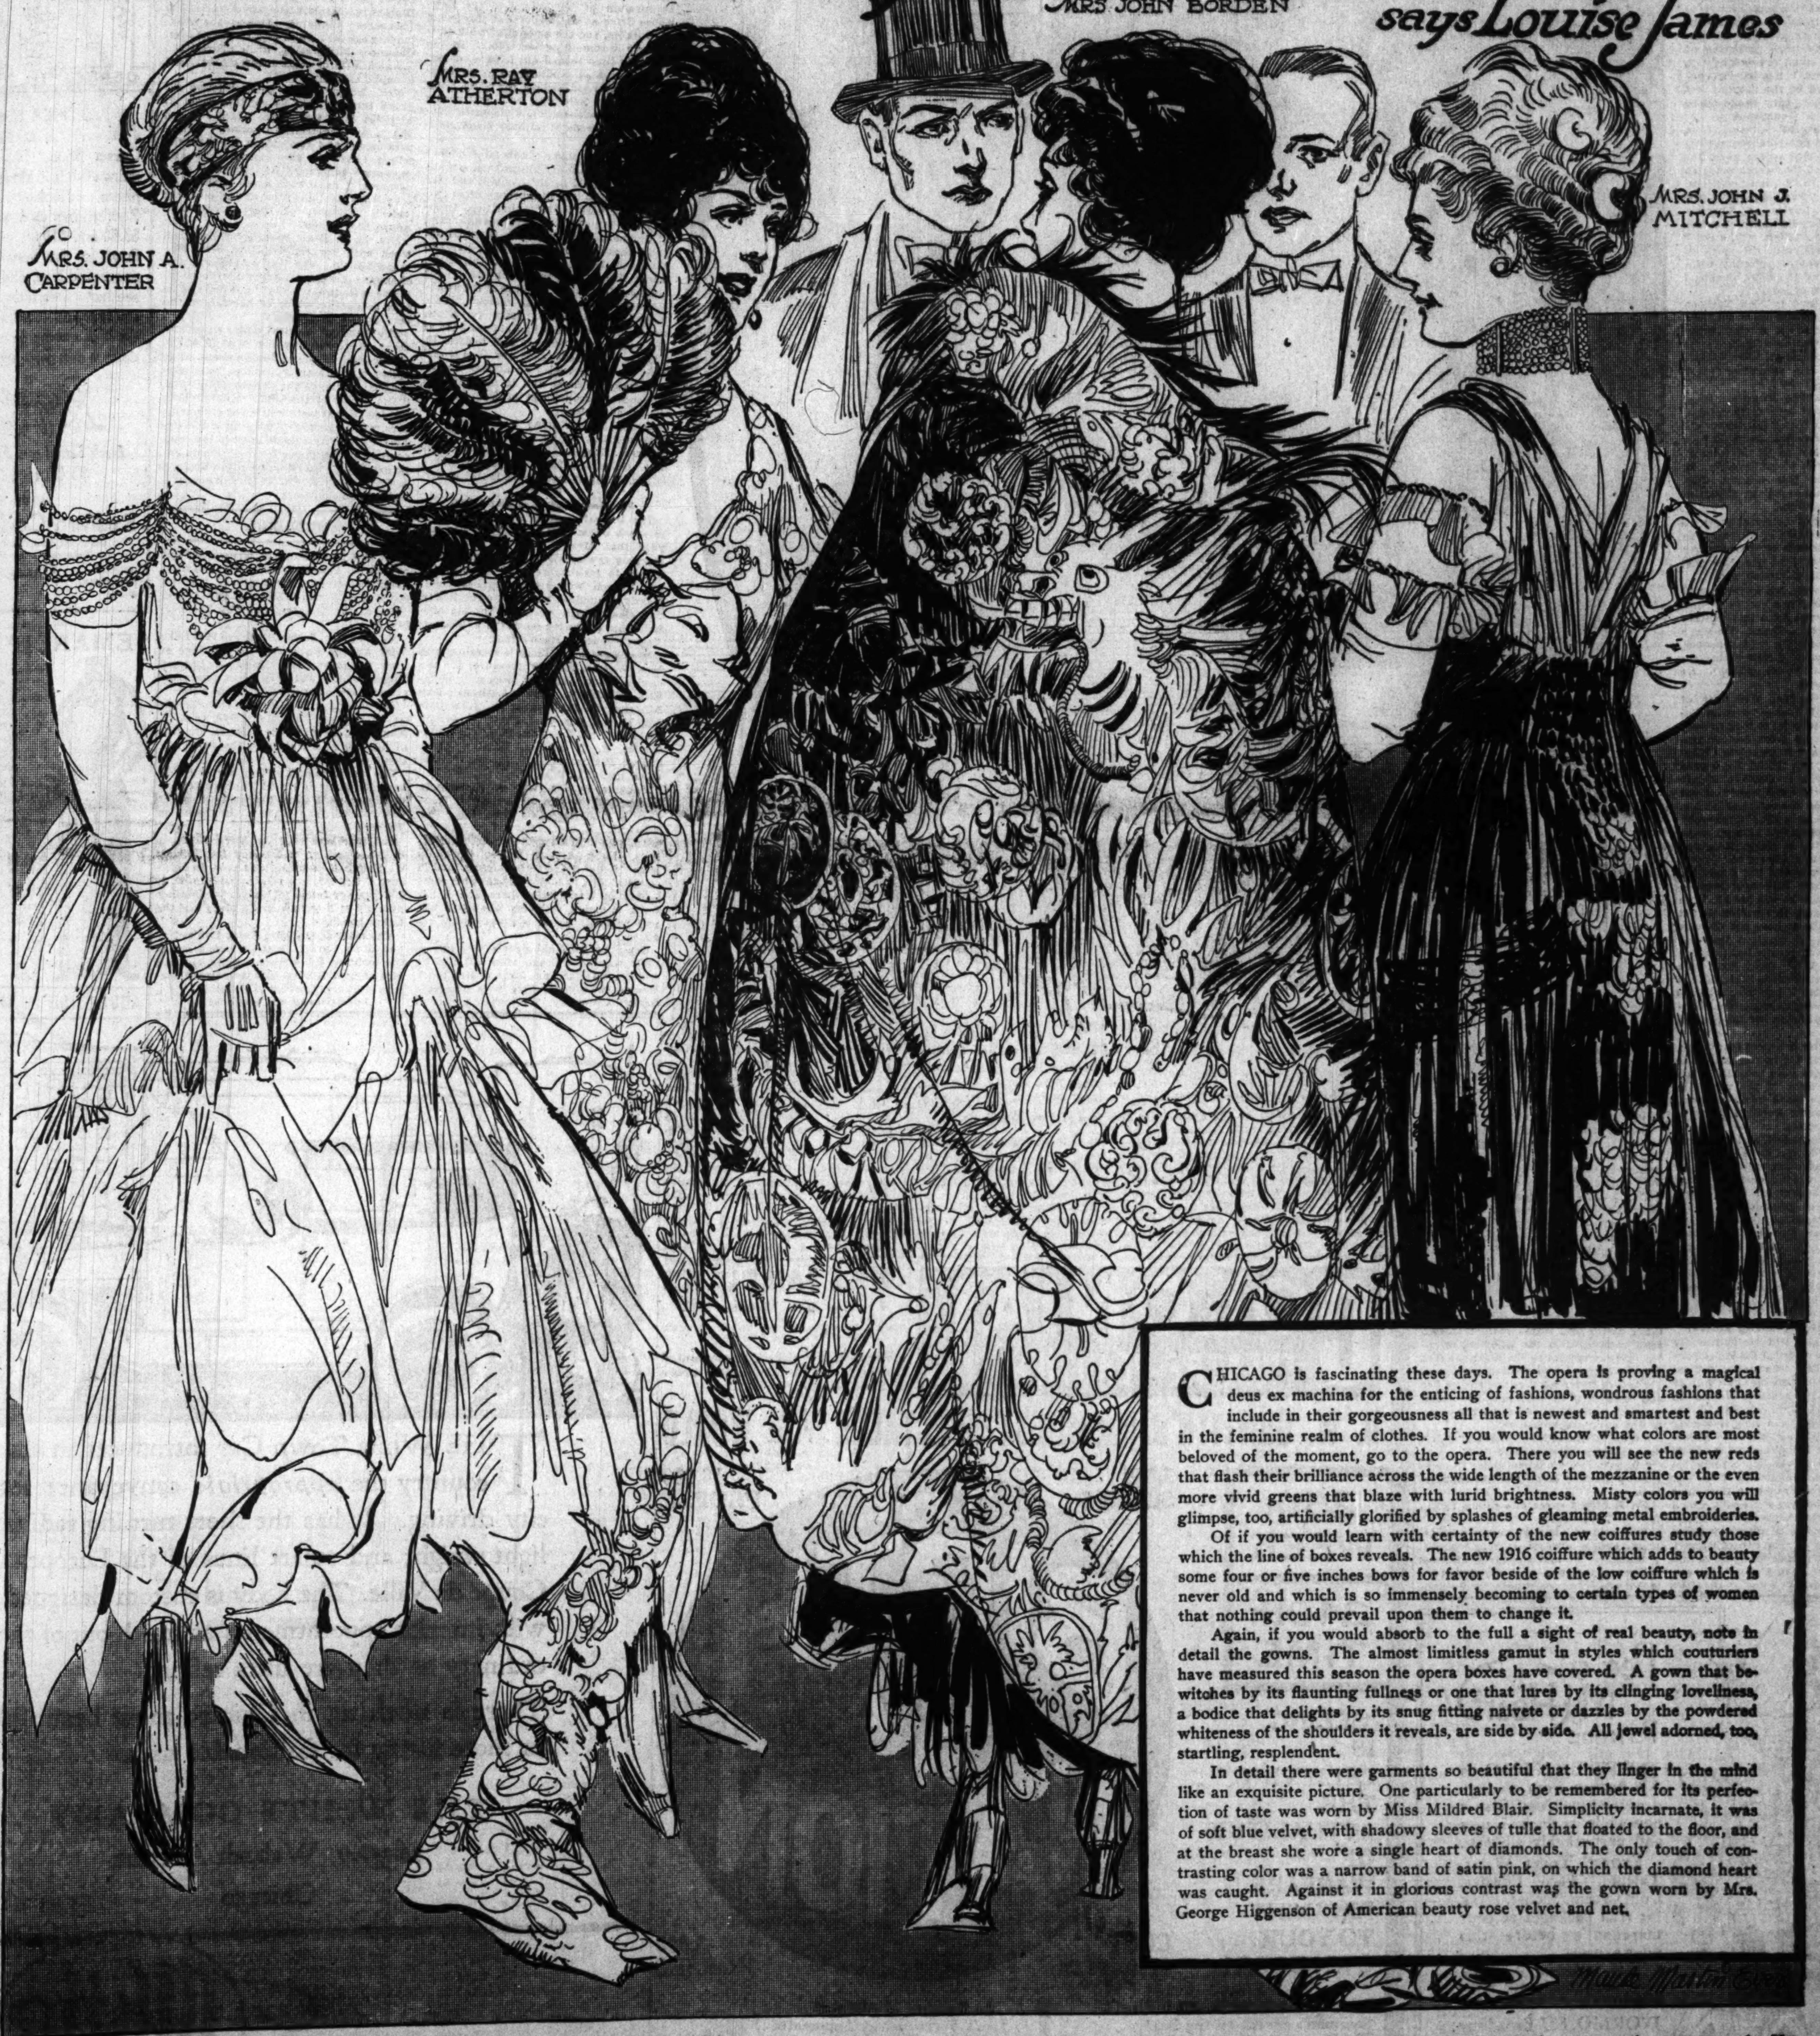
All that's Newest in Fashions Seen in the Opera Boxes

says Louise James



CHICAGO is fascinating these days. The opera is proving a magical deus ex machina for the enticing of fashions, wondrous fashions that include in their gorgeousness all that is newest and smartest and best in the feminine realm of clothes. If you would know what colors are most beloved of the moment, go to the opera. There you will see the new reds that flash their brilliance across the wide length of the mezzanine or the even more vivid greens that blaze with lurid brightness. Misty colors you will glimpse, too, artificially glorified by splashes of gleaming metal embroideries.

Of if you would learn with certainty of the new coiffures study those which the line of boxes reveals. The new 1916 coiffure which adds to beauty some four or five inches bows for favor beside of the low coiffure which is never old and which is so immensely becoming to certain types of women that nothing could prevail upon them to change it.

Again, if you would absorb to the full a sight of real beauty, note in detail the gowns. The almost limitless gamut in styles which couturiers have measured this season the opera boxes have covered. A gown that bewitches by its flaunting fullness or one that lures by its clinging loveliness, a bodice that delights by its snug fitting naivete or dazzles by the powdered whiteness of the shoulders it reveals, are side by side. All jewel adorned, too, startling, resplendent.

In detail there were garments so beautiful that they linger in the mind like an exquisite picture. One particularly to be remembered for its perfection of taste was worn by Miss Mildred Blair. Simplicity incarnate, it was of soft blue velvet, with shadowy sleeves of tulle that floated to the floor, and at the breast she wore a single heart of diamonds. The only touch of contrasting color was a narrow band of satin pink, on which the diamond heart was caught. Against it in glorious contrast was the gown worn by Mrs. George Higgenson of American beauty rose velvet and net.

Honors in the matter of witchery and charm fall to this frock worn by Mrs. John A. Carpenter of pastel green net and vivid orange satin. Bouffant in effect, its neck line was stunningly square and the diminutive bodice draped in pearls. A single band of gold caught about her head held imprisoned the masses of her gold hair.

When lovely woman stoops to a fan the result is loveliness incarnate. A stunning black and white ostrich one was carried by Mrs. Ray Atherton, and it capped the climax of charm to the white crystal gown which she wore. Her hairdress, stunningly suitable to her own type of beauty, marked at the same time the height of the season in hair dressing.

Stunning in line and in material was the wrap worn by Mrs. John Borden of Chinese embroidered velvet in the softer pastel shades, while the gown which she wore under it was of deep sea chiffon, pearl trimmed.

The apex of distinctiveness was the gown worn by Mrs. John J. Mitchell of black velvet and net and with the deep line of the neck decolletage handsomely outlined with rhinestone brilliants. Jet trimmings added to the handsomeness of the gown, while the dog collar of pearls and diamonds harmonized with the beauty of the softly piled hair.

MRS. FREDERICK D. COUNTISS
From A Miniature by ANNA LYNCH

Mrs. Frederick D. Countiss of 1550 North State street, whose miniature by Miss Anna Lynch is reproduced above, is among the boxholders at the opera. On Tuesday they entertained in their box Mr. and Mrs. Aldis F. Brown and Mr. and Mrs. John de Koven Bowen. Mrs. Countiss was formerly Miss Eleanor Robinson of New York.

Opera Big Event in Last Week's Social Calendar

By Mme. X.

THERE is no doubt about it; it is good to have the Chicago Grand opera again in our midst. It is not possible to feel very gay or light hearted these days, but the double row of boxes with the richly bedight and bejeweled women in their front seats and their resigned or restless back row of men, the cheerful, well dressed audience in the main body of the auditorium, and the veritable music lovers in the galleries and balconies, all form an inspiring sight to the average man or woman.

It is a pity to be of the morbid, supersensitive type, as was the poet Tennyson. The last fifteen or twenty years of his life he was obliged entirely to forego the theater, opera, or any large gathering of people because he could not look at such a concourse without being utterly possessed and obsessed by the thought that in fifty or sixty years they would all be dead. Cheerful soul, Tennyson!

Whether it is the year's surcease from opera or a greater emotional susceptibility due to warwrought nerves, never has the musical part of the operas made so strong an appeal to Chicago audiences. Especially poignant was the performance of Charpentier's Louise on Tuesday evening. No one could have watched that exquisite presentation, whose story and music vibrates with the spirit of Paris, the enchantress of yesterday, without having in mind the sister image of the mourning Paris of today.

Grand opera opened in New York on the same evening that it did in Chicago. Was it a reflection of the war that fewer jewels than usual were worn by the Gotham grande dames and that the dresses were not so gay in color as in other years?

Society Losing Five Popular Men.

Chicago society is constantly gaining new recruits to its ranks and losing old standbys. An attractive group of lads and lassies is added to us this season, many of the latter of whom have already been chronicled in this column. The lads will have to have coming out parties to achieve a similar fame.

If we take stock of our social losses we will find a serious state of affairs. The Chicago gay world will have to stagger along this winter without five of its most popular and prominent young men.

Capt. Marion Howze, whose four years' sojourn here made him a host of friends has been transferred from this military post to Fort Houston, Texas. He was a capital auction player, a perfect dancer, and a most agreeable dinner table companion (it sounds like an epitaph). He will be much missed.

The seemingly sudden departure of George Porter with George Twose for Europe was a great surprise to most of their friends and removes from society two men very necessary to complete Chicago's social roster; for, though Mr. Twose has not been much in Chicago of late years, he was a well established resident for a couple of decades before that. Mr. Porter's plan is to return in February, by which time he expects that his apartment in the new building at North State and Scott streets will be ready for occupancy.

Count Giulio Bolognesi has closed his hospitable and cozy little apartment in Astor street because he will have to be so much in Washington this winter that it is not worth while to keep the Chicago ménage running. Ever since Italy entered the war governmental business has necessitated his being away from here more than two-thirds of the time. He has promised to return, if possible, to be one of the band of Spanish gypsies Mrs. Howard Elting is organizing for the Spanish ball of Dec. 17.

The fifth deserter is Eames MacVeagh, who has given up his earlier project to take an apartment here because he expects to spend most of the winter in Washington. He stays here, however, over the ball, having promised also to be in the band of gypsies.

To have five ablebodied, amiable young men, men eligible for dinners, dances, opera parties, and other social functions thus eliminated from the scheme of things is a serious problem for the Chicago hostess and means an added tax on the health and strength of those Chicago bachelors who are still faithful to their posts, ready, if a fourth is needed at the card table, or a vacant place to be filled at a dinner table, or a partnerless maiden to be led forth to the dance, to fling themselves into the breach.

Dr. Chancellor Coming Home.

A temporary gap will be temporarily filled later by the return of Dr. P. S. Chancellor, who last May went as the medical director of a Chicago medical unit to serve the British military forces in France. He has had six months of strenuous hospital work and now is coming back to carry out his intention of last spring to move his household goods to southern California—a plan interrupted by this opportunity of service at the war front. He leaves France on Christmas day. Most of the rest of the unit, which consisted of sixty or seventy nurses and thirty-five surgeons, is remaining there.

Bishop Walter T. Sumner of Oregon, formerly such a prominent figure in Chicago when, as Dean Sumner, he was closely identified with some of the city's most efficient reform work, will spend ten days or a fortnight here as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. Allen Haines of Winnetka. He arrives Dec. 19 and will find a welcome awaiting him from people of many widely separated spheres of life.

There is so much that is grim and grisly about the war that one welcomes any humorous gleam that comes out of that darkness. Of such is Herman Kohlsaat's story of his experience in a London hotel during a Zeppelin raid, a partial account of which experience was given in this column a few weeks ago.

After the first terrific clamor of the Zeppelin attack was over Mr. Kohlsaat, who had gone to bed, rang his bell. No one responded for a long time, even to repeated ringing. Finally a chambermaid appeared and said that the management had made all the hotel employés go to the cellar at the first sound of the raid. An aged chambermaid the following morning made complaint to Mr. Kohlsaat that the management had hustled her out of her bed up under the roof and rushed her and the rest of the staff to subterranean quarters without giving them time even to don shoes and stockings.

"Why," inquired Mr. Kohlsaat, "didn't they take the same care of me?"

"O, you see, we come under the employers' liability law," was the explanation.

Mr. Kohlsaat expects to return to Europe in December.

This column aims at accurate statement, and is always eager to set right a mistake. In last Sunday's TRIBUNE a lapse of memory—alas, we cannot lay it to typesetter or proofreader!—made us describe Mrs. G. A. Carpenter as the daughter of the late Dr. George Isham.

Her father, the late Dr. Ralph N. Isham, was too distinguished and well known a citizen to make such a blunder pardonable. Besides, we hear that Judge G. A. Carpenter decidedly objects to being chronicled as the son-in-law of any Dr. George Isham, late or otherwise. Is this a reflection on his brother-in-law of that name, or an intense dislike to having Dr. George described as "the late"? Anyhow, here are profound apologies to all concerned.

Also to Mrs. Robert Hotz, who was chronicled as Mrs. Rudolf Hotz in connection with her affiliation with the class in first aid being organized to take at St. Joseph's hospital the course prescribed by the American Red Cross.

The members of this class are equipping themselves with surgical gowns and, clad in these, with the regulation caps on their heads, will have bedside visiting at the hospital as part of their instruction. At the end of the course, if they pass their examinations, they will have diplomas signed by the president of the United States which will entitle them to be called on by the government in case of need.

These classes are limited to twenty-five members. Already this one has such a long waiting list that a second class will probably be formed to begin in January.

There is no circle in social life that has not responded to the new state of mind produced by the war in Europe. Even the usually pampered and coddled debutantes are giving up their morning sleeps to work for the wounded and destitute. A few years ago nothing was expected of a young girl in her first season. Her afternoons and evenings were supposed to be devoted entirely to pleasure and her mornings to sweet slumber. She toiled not, neither did she spin. She pursued no studies, nor did she engage in any philanthropic work. Now this order of things is changed. Her mornings are as full as the rest of the day.

Miss Edith Blair has met with the most enthusiastic response to her invitations to debutantes and near-debutantes to join her Saturday morning sewing class. Miss Haire kindly placed the sunny, cheerful gymnasium of her school in the Lake Shore drive at the disposal of this group of workers, and the amount of work they achieve is something incredible. In one morning they turned out 1,700 bandages.

Their finished products go to the English Hospital Aid society, for which Lady Herbert was soliciting help last spring here. This association distributes supplies to hundreds of military hospitals in France.

There is one phase of this labor of love on the part of these Chicago young women which should be emphasized, and that is that it in no wise interferes with or curtails their work for local charities. Probably the writer of an anonymous charge of this nature to Miss Edith Blair did not know that for years Miss Blair has had charge of the kindergarten at Hull house, where five days a week she has taught and played with the children of the neighborhood—little Italians, Greeks, Jews, Poles, and Russians. Rain or shine, weary or rested, she has always been at her post from a quarter to 9 to after 12. This is volunteer work; nor does it end here, as she provides an annual Christmas tree for them and is interested in the home surroundings of the children, who all adore her.

Among her Saturday workers are the Misses Edith Ogden Harrison, Grace Meeker, Marion Strobel, Isabelle Robbins, Helen and Elizabeth Hinde, Grace Tuttle, Helen Aldrich, and Isabel Baker.

Making Hospital Supplies.

The industrial situation in Chicago is so much better this year than it was last year that Mrs. C. M. Ely's Tuesday morning sewing circle can devote all its labors to making hospital supplies for the French wounded emergency fund. Nearly a hundred women are enrolled in this class which works in the big airy ball room on the top floor of Mrs. William Yager's house in Rush street.

Miss Margaret Billings is secretary and Mrs. Watson Armour treasurer for the circle, which numbers among its members Mesdames Bryan Lathrop, Ray Atherton, P. D. Armour Jr., John Borden, W. G. Beale, W. J. Chalmers, Joseph Cudahy, J. G. Coleman, H. C. Chatfield-Taylor, F. S. Eames, Stanley Field, George Higginson, E. S. Moore, William Odell, and C. B. Pike.

Madame Edvina, who so charmingly interpreted the rôle of Louise last Tuesday, is in private life the Hon. Mrs. Edwards. Her late husband, an Englishman, was a relative of Sir Arthur Butler's. Lady Arthur Butler (formerly Miss Nellie Steger of Chicago, and a sister of Mrs. F. S. Gorton) gave her some letters of introduction here and, if her work in opera company allows it, she will probably prove a great social addition.

Other professional people who are on their way to Chicago who will also be welcomed socially are Mr. and Mrs. Peter Heggie, who come here with Granville Barker's company. The part of Androcles in "Androcles and the Lion" was written by Bernard Shaw for Mr. Heggie and is a delightful creation as he plays it. The Heggies will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Smith, 999 Lake Shore drive, during their sojourn in Chicago.

Providence Nursery Benefit.

The second night of the Granville Barker troupe's engagement here, Nov. 30, is to be a benefit performance, the proceeds of which will go to the Providence Day nursery. The money so raised will be used to aid in maintaining the new building soon to be opened to care for the children grown too old for the nursery itself, who are yet too young to be left alone at home by working mothers.

On the committee in charge of the benefit are Miss Harriot Houghteling, chairman, and Mesdames R. E. Danielson, C. J. Hambleton, G. A. Ranney, S. B. Steel, and Sidney Worthy. A distinguished list of patronesses goes from Mrs. T. B. Blackstone through the alphabet to Mrs. Lawrence Williams. Among the boxholders are Mrs. John de Koven and Mrs. Chauncey McCormick, while already the advance sale of seats insures a brilliant evening socially.

Mrs. Arthur Aldis' book, "Plays for Small Stages," will be out this week. It includes five short plays—"Mrs. Pat and the Law," "Extreme Unction," "Temperament," and two others the names of which have for the moment run into memory's oubliette. All except "Temperament" have been acted in the Aldis playhouse at Lake Forest and on other boards. Pictures of these productions adorn the volume.

Mrs. H. B. Beale spent a few days last week with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Emmons Blaine. She was as brilliant and charming as ever, having the keen, incisive wit and unusual conversational gifts so characteristic of her father, the late James G. Blaine.

The Amateur Musical club's entertainment on Monday evening, Nov. 29, at Orchestra hall is to be a festive event. It is called "An Amateur Gambol," and two musical skits, "The Magic Mill" and "The Pirate of the Gulf," wherein both music and text were written by clubmembers, are to be given—also by clubmembers. The only outside hand in the composition is the music for the "Perambulating Four," which was written by John A. Carpenter. The proceeds will go to the club's extension work.

Gowns of Smart Set a Gorgeous Sight at Opera First Night

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—With stately majesty the fashionable season opened Monday night. The Metropolitan Grand Opera company officially initiated it and afforded our smart set the opportunity, as it has done on twenty-one other occasions previously, of making a magnificently dignified showing. Five tiers of horseshoe blazed with diamonds and displayed the marble firmness of white shoulders. The scene in perspective was so thrilling that one could not but insist on going close to it, on mingling in it.

MRS. VINCENT ASTOR.

Mrs. Vincent Astor was discovered to have on exactly the same costume that she wore last year, hair ornament and all, the only differentiation in her appearance being that the pale colored dress had become just the least bit soiled. One woman kept a hand in a tiny muff, while her neighbor on her right wielded lazily the breadth of her ample shoulders a full, pale yellow ostrich fan. Some one wore an earring three and a half inches long in one ear and no decoration of any kind in the other. A man was saying in the Samson and Delilah duet that is was hard to get cotton futures that day, and his neighbor in the next box observed: “Rotten performance. I've seen it eighteen times and this is the worst. Caruso is going down.”

I myself thought that he did right well—that, indeed, he had a good deal to do with the success of the evening. One's point of view on this matter depended somewhat on one's location in the house. From the pit, where I entered, I thought the boxes were the making of the opera. From the boxes I came to the previously mentioned conclusion—that Mr. Caruso was responsible in large measure for the success.

Looked Artistic and Pretty.

But in any event, this column is devoted to a discussion of the boxes. To take up the first point, why did Mrs. Astor array herself in exactly the same costume she wore last year? Scratch out the economy motif, and consider other points of view. Some people say that the most unfashionable people in the world are the fashionables; that they are so bored with changing their clothes, and always living on exhibition, so to speak, that they don't care what they wear.

It is possible that out of her rooms full of clothes, Mrs. Astor's eye happened to light on the pale blue velvet costume for the first time in a long while. That morning before she went out she gave directions to her maid that she would wear it that evening (that is the way one usually does, you know—leave directions in the morning regarding your various costumes for the day). She may never have once thought that this was exactly what she had on a year ago.

Then there is another pleasanter explanation. Mrs. Astor is young, you will remember, and romantic, and she is married to a young man. Last year their appearance at the opera was the first time they were seen together as husband and wife. They had been married only the shortest time. Monday evening was an anniversary. Maybe the bride of a year arrayed herself in her former costume in commemoration of the event.

At any rate, she looked very artistic in her long willowy lines and very pretty. The dress of pale blue was thin over the shoulders and cut out deeply in the neck. A thin blue scarf clouded her white throat and her long, slim arms. Her hair was encircled with a slender band of brilliants, which held in place an upstanding ornament of brilliants that caught a slender, waving cluster of aigrettes.

Gorgeous Costumes Worn.

No narrative of an opera amounts to anything without a description of a lot of costumes. Mrs. George Gould was one of the gorgeous spectacles of the occasion. She had on a dress of old gold tulle made over a white ground, and she wore for a girdle a spectacular serpentine Empire belt of gold, heavily studded with oriental stones of red, blue and green. Above this her sleeveless gown was a misty cloud of filmy lace and tulle. Mrs. Ogden Mills' costume was of the second empire style. It was a bluish silver gauze fabric with a silver lace bertha. The bodice was cut with a short waist, and the neck was décolleté to the waistline. This bertha followed the décolleté.

Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt is absent in Europe, where she and Mr. Vanderbilt went to continue their work of nursing the wounded. Her place was taken gracefully by her daughter, Miss Barbara Rutherford, who sat in box 6 next door to Mrs. Vincent Astor and all evening kept on her gray velvet wrap, which looked very rich indeed, with its wide chinchilla collar. From under its concealing length glimmered a lovely, shimmery looking costume of silver gauze.

Leeds Adopt a Boy.

Now that the Shepards have popularized the custom of adopting a child, smart society is “doing it.” Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Leeds have taken one whom Mrs. Leeds insists “came straight from heaven.” That is what she says when people ask the question, and she adds, “If you could see him you would say so too.” He has been with Mr. and Mrs. Leeds for two years and is said to be a beautiful flaxen haired, blue eyed cherub. His adopted mother says that to tell where she got him might one day embarrass him and his parents, too, so to use her own words she has just made up the answer that he came straight from heaven.

News of the Chicago Women's Clubs

By Inez Travers.

THE officers of the Woman's City club for the season of 1915-'16 are as follows: Mrs. H. M. Wilmarth, honorary president; Miss Mary E McDowell, president; Mrs. Fredrick C. Bartlett, first vice president; Mrs. Dunlap Smith, second vice president; Mrs. W. D. Richardson, treasurer; Mrs. James L. Houghteling, secretary.

The club has issued an interesting and comprehensive bulletin of its activities this year. No club book has been issued since the end of 1911, and the club gives in a general way the story of what the committees have done during the last four years.

In some instances the chairmen have briefly reviewed the work of their committees from the beginning; in others, when the annual reports have made a consecutive history of the committees they have been used intact. Reports of the committees working through the summer have been brought up to date, the others to the annual meeting, April 1, 1915.

The plan of activities for the coming year is as usual: "To bring together women interested in promoting the welfare of the city; to coördinate and render more effective the scattered social and civic activities in which they are engaged; to extend a knowledge of public affairs; to aid in improving civic conditions, and to assist in arousing an increased sense of social responsibility for the safeguarding of the home, the maintenance of good government, and the ennobling of that larger home of all—the city."

The next meeting of the club will be held in the rooms of the Men's City club. There will be a dinner served at 6:30, followed by an address by William C. Graves, superintendent of the Illinois State reformatory.

A feature of the club's activities this season is the Tuesday morning class in citizenship.

The directors are Miss Jane Addams, Mrs. Edward W. Bemis, Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen, Miss S. P. Breckinridge, Mrs. Treat Campbell, Mrs. Inez Rodgers Deach, Mrs. Charles Scribner Eaton, Mrs. J. Paul Goode, Mrs. Charles F. Harding, Dr. Caroline Hedger, Mrs. F. C. Letts, Mrs. William S. Monroe, Mrs. Edward Murfey, Miss Emily Napieralski, Miss Anna E. Nicholes, Mrs. William B. Owen, Mrs. Henry Solomon, Mrs. Frederick C. Test, and Miss Sarah B. Tunnicliff.

Plans of President and Fiancee Keep Capital Society Guessing.

By Mme. Z.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special Correspondence.]—As yet there is no line on the presidential Thanksgiving plans. One doesn't even dare say "the White House Thanksgiving," for no one knows whether it will be spent at the White House or with some of the numerous Galt relatives. The president's pronounced taste for strictly family parties is so well established that there is no question that it will be a family dinner—but whose family and where, nobody ventures to say.

One recalls the two different Thanksgivings of his administration—last year with the president and Miss Bones visiting the Sayres at Williamstown, Miss Margaret off with friends of her own, and the McAdoos on a little Jekyll island trip; and the year before with a big family party, including most of Miss Jessie's wedding party, and she and Mr. Sayre, just two days wed, flying back to eat Thanksgiving dinner "at home," before resuming their wedding journey And one realizes that this one is bound to be still "different," however the president and his fiancée elect to spend it.

It had been understood that Mrs. Sayre—the only member of the president's immediate family who does not live in Washington—would be at the White House long before this with her husband and baby, and a good old fashioned family reunion—with a difference, of course—would celebrate the feast of the turkey. And since his Rhode Island rival who for years has fattened the White House Thanksgiving bird, died something over a year ago, presumably South Trimble would have the glory of furnishing a good Tennessee turkey whose Democratic affiliations were beyond question. But the Sayres have not arrived, and there is no definite expectation that they will "until just before the wedding," and the prospect of a real family reunion for Thanksgiving at the White House seems vague.

No Word from White House.

As for getting any information at the White House as to the president's plans, it can't bedone. The proverbial clam has nothing on the president in the matter of being close mouthed. The days when he prated gaily of the desirability of pitiless publicity at the White House, while other and more experienced politicians shook their heads sadly and murmured, "Boy, you don't know what you are talking about," are long since past. If he had not already learned it, the pitiless publicity idea applied to the presidential courtship has taught him a thing or two.

The badgering of the press and the public finally won from the interesting pair the announcement that the wedding would take place at a date close to the end of December and that only members of the immediate families would be present. But that official announcement, while it satisfied the official set that they need not consider clothes for the president's wedding in planning their winter wardrobes, has not entirely convinced people that there may not still be a surprise sprung on them.

One woman, who generally knows a thing or two about what is likely to happen, suggested that it would be well to keep an eye on these innocent little motor trips that the president and Mrs. Galt are so fond of. "I wouldn't put it past them to slip off quietly to Rockville one of these days."

"Rockville" was merely figurative. It happens that Rockville, a few miles over the district line in Maryland, easily accessible by trolley or good motoring roads, is the favorite Gretna Green of Washington couples who want to be married with the least possible ostentation. The Maryland laws are complaisant, and there is no pitiless publicity about a Rockville wedding. And the woman who suggested a Rockville wedding is not the only one who keeps a wary eye on "these pleasant little motor trips" that the president and his fiancée so greatly affect.

One cannot, however, quite see what fun the president would find in a stunt like that. He would not even have the joy of breaking a precedent or establishing a new one.

There are just two precedents for a president about to marry—one for a White House wedding, as set by Grover Cleveland; the other, for practically a Rockville wedding, as set by President Tyler, who took a day off and got married in New York at a time when no one expected his wedding, though his engagement was generally known

Wedding Trip Plans Unknown.

On the whole, while Washington is prepared for anything and resolved not to be surprised whatever is done, it inclines to the belief that the wedding really will take place near the close of the year, probably on Dec. 28, by way of celebrating the president's fifty-ninth birthday, and that, as in the case of Miss Eleanor Wilson's marriage, there will be no cards, but that the few who are to be present will be notified either verbally or by informal notes.

That being as near settled as it is likely to be, conjecture is now centering about the wedding trip. The fact that the Mayflower, the president's seagoing hack, has recently been down at Norfolk being overhauled, lends color to the suggestion that it will be used for a honeymoon yacht. Naval officers say that it was simply given needed repairs, a new coat of paint, and an overhauling of its machinery. But it undoubtedly spent two weeks at Norfolk instead of the five days scheduled. The boat was scraped and painted, waxed and varnished, inside and out. Salon and staterooms were renovated and it was kept on at Norfolk fully a week after repairs were completed awaiting new furniture, including, it is said, a new piano, which was on its way from New York.

Still a yacht does not seem an ideal place to spend a honeymoon "while the old year lies a-dying." Sounds rather chilly! Pass Christian, one of the places most frequently mentioned by those who are bent on arranging the president's wedding trip for him, has a kindlier suggestion and a honeymoon in Virginia, "where they both were born," seems eminently appropriate to many of the busy little suggesters—to say nothing of the cordial invitation from San Francisco, "Come out and see the fair and we'll show you one puffickly-dam-gorgeous time!"

White House Social Functions.

What really concerns Washington most is what sort of a "first lady" the new first lady is going to make. Is the usual routine of White House functions to be carried out? Will the White House be once more the center around which Washington society revolves, as it was during both the Roosevelt and the Taft régimes?

Probably not. Neither the president nor, so far as one can judge, any member of his family, "active, honorary, or prospective," cares at all for the social end of his job. Mrs Galt is a different woman from Mrs. Taft, who had both great social ambition and wide social experience. She was thoroughly familiar with official society. Mrs. Galt is not, and the president has no wish to be.

Nominally Mrs. Galt has lived in Washington as long as either Mrs. Taft or Mrs Roosevelt. But she has of late been abroad a good part of the time, and even when she was here she has been in Washington without being of Washington, so far as official Washington is concerned. She has had no connection at all with official life here.

There is no reason, other than lack of inclination—for, heaven knows, it is easy enough to break in—why she should not have had such connection, but she hasn't It is quite possible that she rather looked down upon it The "cave dwellers," to which contingent Mrs. Galt belongs, rather affect a superiority to official society.

Then again, for the seven or eight years since her husband's death she has always worn mourning—at least up to six months ago she did. During recent years she did not wear the long widow's veil, but she always wore black, unrelieved except by the white ruche under the brim of her black hat and resting on the hair, the white ruche that is regarded as specifically widow's mourning. And her short veils were always either crêpe bordered or at any rate edged with heavy grosgrain ribbon. Her sudden blossoming into green sport coats and ruby tinted evening wraps, not to mention the sedate blues and greens of her street costumes, rather dazzled her acquaintances, who for years had been accustomed to seeing her in black of the distinctly mourning type.

Entertaining Comes High.

Probably there is something in the not infrequent suggestion that the Wilsons have not felt that they could afford extensive and elaborate entertaining. One recalls the president's application for a Carnegie teacher's pension about the time that he plunged into politics, on tho ground that his had not been a money getting career and that, if he was to devote his time to the public service, he was entitled to some assurance as to the future of his wife and daughters. Certainly the White House is not a place to save money. White House entertaining comes high, and in the main the president pays for it, though the house itself and the routine expenses of its proper upkeep are on Uncle Sam.

One has even occasionally heard a suggestion that Mrs. Galt's private means would "help some," also the other suggestion that her fortune was hers only so long as she remained Norman Galt's widow. All this sounds terribly snobbish, but it is part of the general discussion, the pitiless publicity which the president has been cured of advocating

The president was quoted about the time his engagement was announced as having estimated his own savings at about $100,000, from royalties from his writing and fortunate investments Mrs. Galt's fortune is generally placed at a like sum, and incidentally that would cut little ice in a brilliant social campaign at the White House, assuming that she kept it even if she remarried.

She does keep it. Norman Galt's will, on record right here in the District of Columbia, where he and his fathers for several generations have lived and died leaves the bulk of his possessions to his beloved wife, absolutely without any condition of any sort, and makes her one of the executors without bond. All of which, as already stated, seems sordid, and snobbish, and all that. But it might as well be said once and done with.

Parents Should Know this Splendid Remedy

Simple Laxative Compound Helps to Correct Constipation in Children.

With all children there are times when the bowels fail to act naturally and it becomes necessary for the parents to administer a remedy. Cathartics and purgatives should never be used as these agents afford only temporary relief while their violent action shocks the system unduly. Mrs. Eva F. Gaff, 517 10th St., Washington, D. C., says that her little girl, Marie, had been subject to constipation, and that she found Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin the best remedy because of its mildness, and now always keeps a bottle of it in the house.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a compound of simple laxative herbs, free from opiates or narcotic drugs of any kind, and is an ideal remedy for children because of its mild action and positive effect. Its use tends to strengthen the impaired bowel action and restore normal regularity.

It is important that parents should know of a dependable remedy with no unpleasant after effects, griping or strain.

MARIE GAFF

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin costs only fifty cents a bottle and can be procured at any drug store. To obtain a trial bottle, free of charge, write to Dr. W B. Caldwell, 454 Washington St., Monticello, Ill.

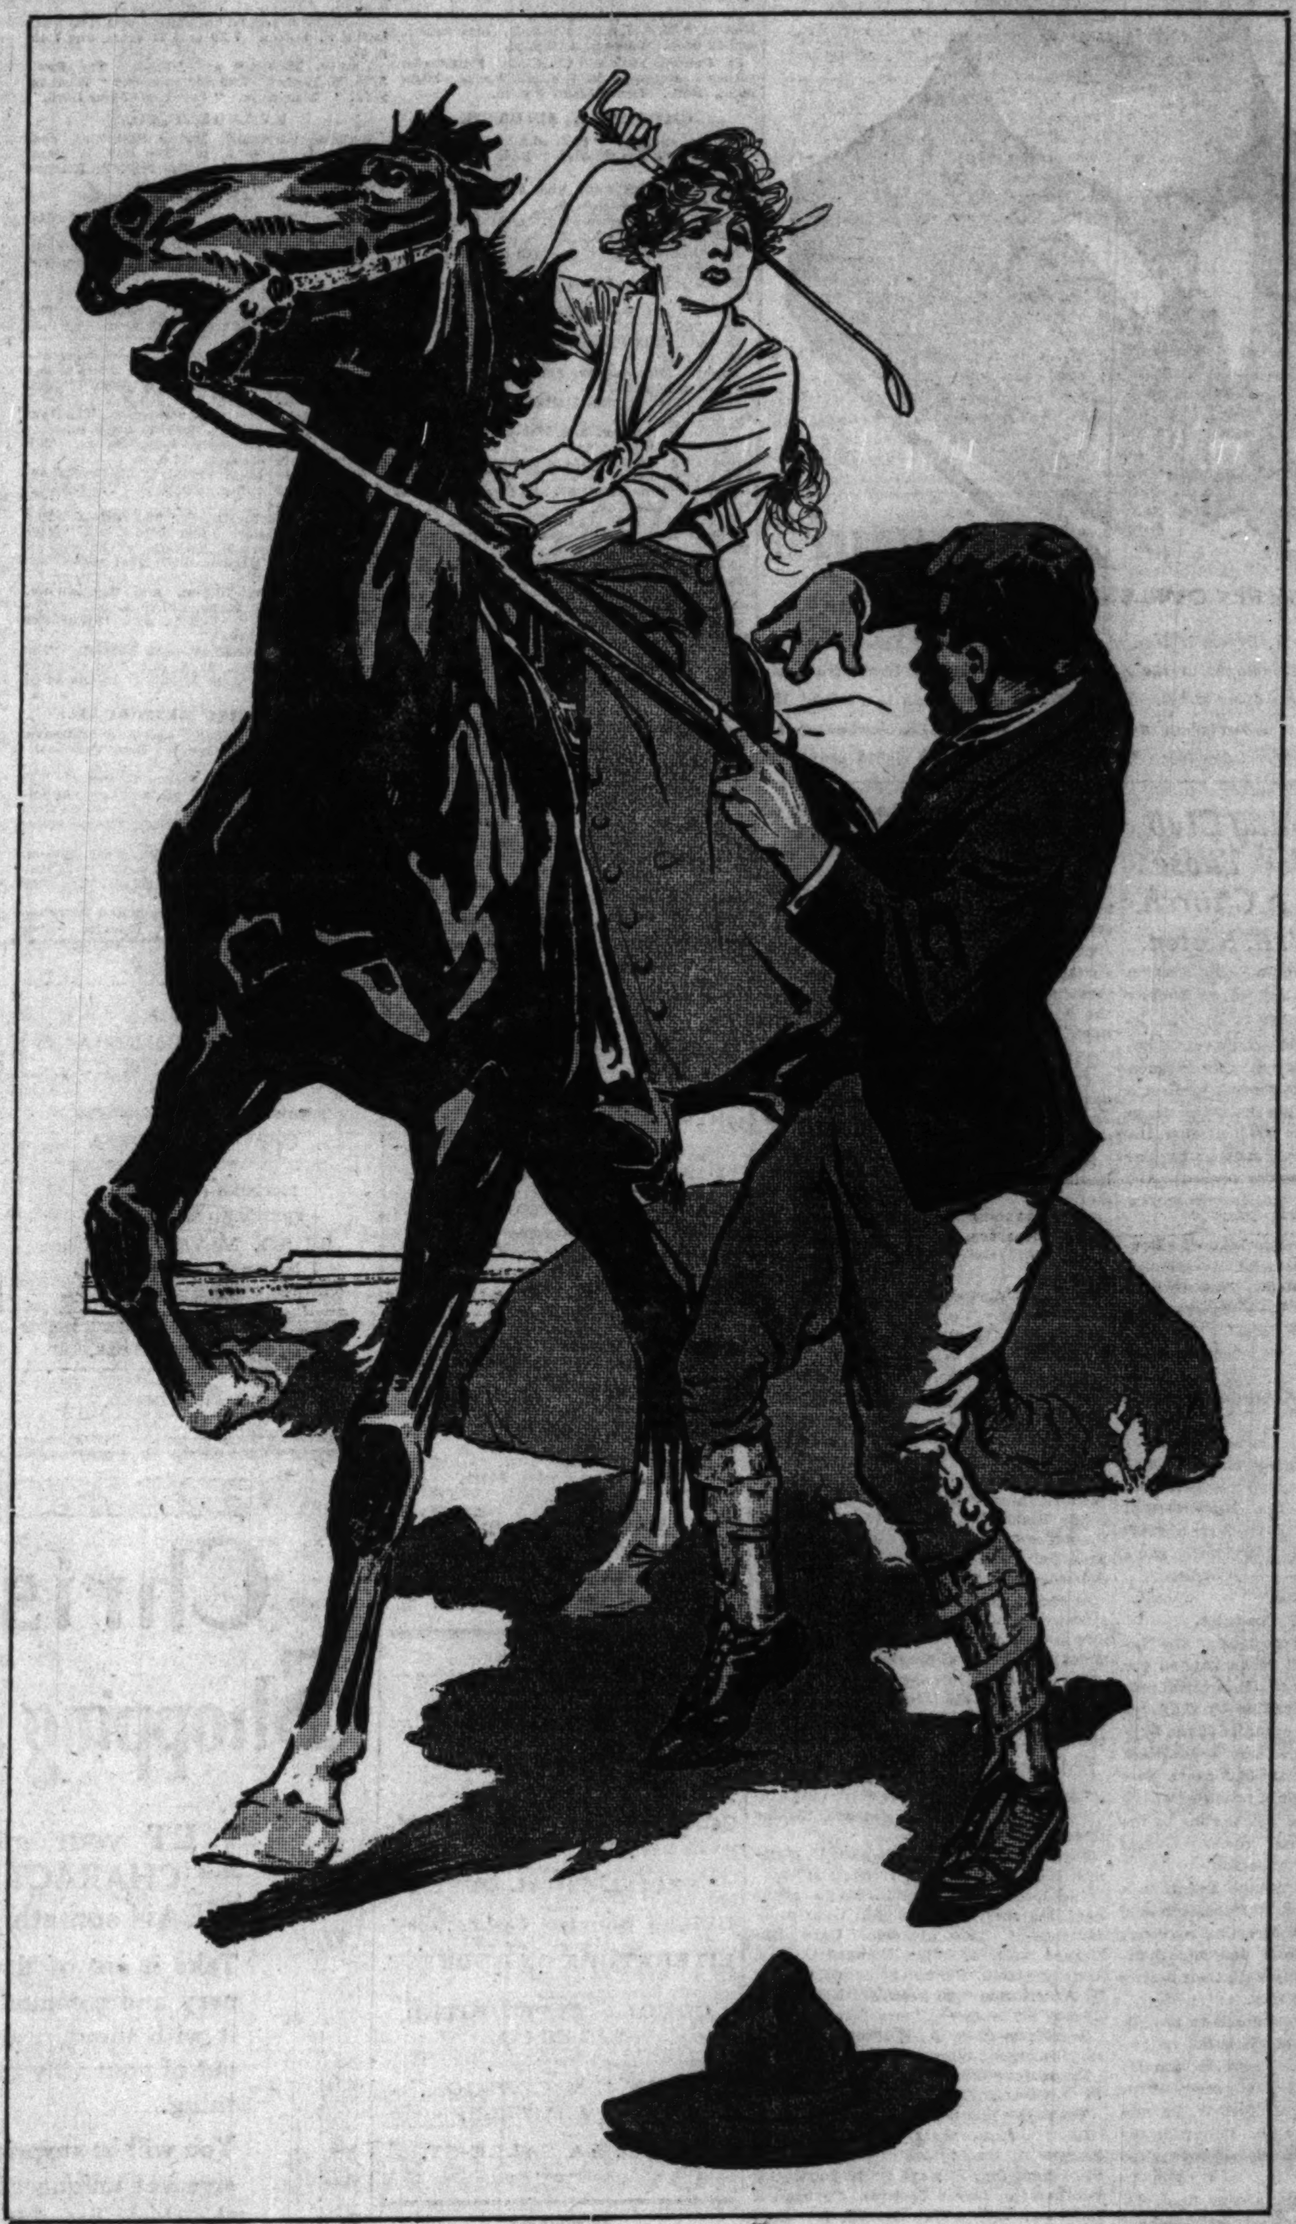
THE BLACK PEARL



A thrilling story of the great West—of a wonderful vaudeville dancer known as The Black Pearl, resting at her father's home on the edge of the desert—a story of love and jealousy—of wild rides and desperate chances—of a maddened, rejected lover, an escaped bandit and a real hero.

The Black Pearl is as beautiful as an opening rosebud—bewitching, imperious, laughing, pouting, headstrong—a girl with the light of the stars in her eyes and the spirit of a feminine dare-devil in her breast.

She falls in love—as girls will do—but her lover proves false, and she flees to the mountains where her father has a mining cabin, and where also a notorious bandit is hid.

And one night The Black Pearl dances for the men in the mining camp—dances with all her wizardry of swaying movement, dances with a relaxed abandon that holds them spell-bound, forgetful of everything save the wondrous beauty of her who dances before them—till suddenly the sheriff and his deputies burst into the hall with leveled revolvers—

But you must read the whole thrilling story yourself—read of the wild flight through the mountains—of Pearl and Seagrave imprisoned in a lonely cabin for days by a mountain snow-slide—of the outlawed bandit, with a price on his head, who can cook the most wonderful dishes—of the quiet Seagrave who proves to be a real man in every inch of his sturdy height—and how The Black Pearl's heart is at last set on fire by a flame of undying love.

It is one of Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's greatest stories. Don't fail to commence with the first chapter.

THE REV. CHARLES R. BROWN

The Rev. Charles R. Brown is dean of the divinity school of Yale university. He will be the speaker tonight at the Sunday Evening club in Orchestra hall, Michigan avenue near Adams street. The president of the club is Clifford W. Barnes. The club is nonsectarian and holds out a special welcome to the transient and the downtown dwellers. It has just entered on its eighth year.

Sunday Evening Club a Church for Those Without a Church.

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

THE Sunday Evening club, which meets tonight and every Sunday night from October to June in Orchestra hall, Michigan avenue, between Adams street and Jackson boulevard, is a special service to meet a special need. It is a church for the stranger, the transient, the hotel dweller, the man or the woman without a regular church. It is the meeting place for the lonesome, the unattached, the person who isn't anchored.

The speaker this evening will be the Rev Charles R. Brown, dean of the divinity school of Yale university, New Haven, Conn. The subject of the address will be "The True Measure of Life."

Dr. Brown was until last month the moderator of the national council of Congregational churches, the highest position in the denomination.

Before going to Yale he was pastor of the First Congregational church, Oakland, Cal. He was a leader in civic reform and was one of the first supporters of Francis J. Heney in his exposures of graft in San Francisco. He is a lecturer and a writer of books as well as a preacher.

New Music Tonight.

David R. Forgan, president of the National City bank, will participate in the service. One feature of the musical program will be a composition by Clarance Dickenson, the first organist of the Sunday Evening club and now organist of the Brick Presbyterian church of New York. It will be the first rendition of the music in Chicago and will be sung by the choir of one hundred voices. Gustaf Holmquist will sing the solos.

The Sunday Evening club maintains a committee on church membership and offers its services in directing inquirers to the church of their denominational choice and in harmony with their desires as to location in the city.

To transients it does much to provide the social elements of Christian fellowship. Preceding the regular Sunday evening program a half hour study of the Bible is conducted by Clifford W. Barnes, the president of the club. Following the regular evening's address all are invited to a fellowship meeting in a room off from the foyer on the second floor.

On Wednesday evening there is a social gathering at which addresses, musical entertainments and select readings are provided. The formal program is supplemented by informal singing and by social visiting.

Model for Other Clubs.

The Sunday Evening club has recently entered upon its eighth year. It has maintained an average attendance of 2,400. Francis G. Peabody of Harvard university, who recently addressed the club, prefaced his speech by saying the two objects of highest interest in Chicago and for which she is rightly noted are Chicago's system of playgrounds and small parks for the children and the Sunday Evening club.

Owing to the success of the Sunday Evening club at least eight other Sunday evening clubs, having modifications in the name according to the locality or the church in which the clubs meet, have been organized in Chicago and suburbs. A dozen of the larger cities have sent for information as to the methods of support, organization, and popularity of the club. In some of the cities a club with similar aims has been started. The movement seems to have a national interest, and is regarded by many as one of the significant signs of the times.

While the Sunday Evening club is strictly nonsectarian, Jewish rabbis, Unisersalists, and Unitarians being among the speakers, it favors laying emphasis upon essential Christianity.

"Do you want straight religion spoken about on this platform?" one of the speakers asked Mr. Barnes. "The straighter the better," was Mr. Barnes' reply.

No chance has been given speakers having special schemes to promote, no matter what the cause, to use the club to promote their propaganda. The aim of the club has been to stimulate and to help in a practical way all who come to its services.

Some of the speakers the last season were:

Dr. Lyman Abbott, Robert E. Speer, Dean Charles R. Brown, Dr. J. A. Macdonald, Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Bishops Charles D. Williams, Francis J. McConnell, Charles P. Anderson, Edwin Holt Hughes, President Henry Churchill King, Dr. William P. Merrill, Prof. Jeremiah W. Jenks, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch, Dr. Hugh Black, Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, President Albert Parker Fitch, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, former Gov. Chase S. Osborn, Prof. Edward A. Steiner.

At each service some business or professional man takes part in the service, usually in the reading of the scriptures, but at times by leading in prayer.

The cost of maintenance last year was $18,644. By far the largest item in the resources comes from the contributions and the boxes.

Marry the Man of Your Choice

How a woman is to choose the right man for a husband; how to meet him, attract him and enthrall him, so he will eagerly propose marriage; how to easily hold his love and loyalty after marriage—in short, how to make the man of one's choice "just crazy" about her, both before and after marriage — are subjects many women find interesting.

For sheer, cold-blooded, scientific instruction along these lines I can recommend a most audacious book called "The Orange Blossom," which may be examined at any book seller's. It contains plenty of deadly effective coaching for the woman, but offers no hope for the man save complete surrender. The author justifies his revelations of certain secret information by attempting to prove that "to lead in the love-making is not only woman's right, but her duty."—Advertisement.

ART by ANNE ELLIS

SOME of the artists are objecting, it seems, to the decisions of the jury in the present American oil exhibition now in progress at the Art institute. One is glad to state that it is some of the younger men, who are probably prompted by the enthusiasm and prejudices as well as the inexperience of youth. For never was jury fairer, either in the awarding of prizes or entries—never did better intent and more absolute sincerity go to the accomplishment of any task. The inside story of the judgments is one of slow and painful elimination after several hours of argument as to the exact standard to be maintained in the exhibit.

The decision was reached that the standard must be the highest possible and then the work began. Conscientious and unprejudiced judgments only admitted the works into the exhibit and conscientious and unprejudiced judgments only barred those that were rejected.

The exhibition is a standard. It is different from last year's in many ways, the element of ostensible leaning toward the impressionistic is not nearly so noticeable. That striving after the bizarre which in some cases last year was evident is gone entirely—there is more general strength and purpose and more finished work than ever before.

One of the most notable exhibits, in my opinion, is that of Joseph T. Pearson Jr. He has a manner that is all his own, and remarkably striking. It is as if the value of his imagination had invested the commonest objects with a preciousness that he must make the world realize. Never in the works of any American artist have I seen just this remarkable degree of imaginativeness. And his tricks of composition give this quality new emphasis. His pictures are not happy ones, nor are they exactly beautiful in the usual acceptance of the word, but they are full of meaning.

By Eric De Lamarter.

HECTIC indeed is the first week of an opera season; concern over new stars, furbishing of wardrobes and memories, wild and sometimes naive yarns of doings bizarre, extravagant likes and dislikes, produce about the psychological state of a girls' seminary during the opening days of school. And when it's all done and Sunday morning dawns one sits down in carpet slippers before a cup of coffee and wonders what really happened, anyway?

This week saw the propitious resurrection of the Chicago opera company, in which "La Gioconda" outfaced the audience, as usual, largely because it was the first bill and because Emmy Destinn was in the cast; secondly, "Louise" bade fair to resume its vogue, with Louise Edvina as successor to Mary Garden's old rôle; thirdly, German opera began more auspiciously than heretofore with a capital performance of "Tristan and Isolde"; fourthly, the technical facility of the ensemble seems at this date to be greater than in previous seasons. Even against the inclement weather of Thursday evening "Werther," with Lucien Muratore and the debutante, Conchita Supervia, in the cast, was given to a very appreciative audience.

There were a few odd quirks during these first performances. One, involving the matter of Wagnerian tenors and their grief over a combination of cantilene and pianissimos, pointed again to the suspicion that the croakers of a generation ago were more right than suspicious when they prophesied that the "Wagnerian method" would spell ruin for many singers. We all recall the acclamation that greeted Jean de Reszke after his debut in such rôles—the tremendous success of his experiment. "The best Wagnerian tenor," several conservatives dubbed him. And the reason was simply that of his ability to sing the cantilene instead of declaiming it. Charles Dalmores' Tristan of two years ago and his Parsifal fell not at all into this pitfall, even though Mr. Dalmores' eyes were holden in a pail shaped helmet ludicrous to his "Parsifal" audience.

From the audience's attitude during this first week it is evident that the resurrection of the opera is gratifying to a high degree. The company has given good earnest of its capability.

"France today," said Hector Dufranne, the baritone of the opera, "is a re-created nation. What its spirit is cannot be understood by any one who has not been within its confines. And yet there is so little change in the economic order of the nation that, outside Paris and the larger cities of the north, you barely realize that anything unusual is going on. In the real 'country' nothing is changed.

"There are some strange adjustments. The other day the famous organ virtuoso, Joseph Bonnet of St. Eustasche, got permission to leave the trenches for a few hours and went to Paris to play some special service." (M. Bonnet, by the way, is, or was recognized, before the war, as the most brilliant of the younger French organists. He appears to have been born with a double-third technique, which is the organist's simile for the proverbial "silver spoon in the mouth.") Then he changed back from organ to gun.

"So far as I recall, there is no cessation of activity among the composers. The painters have taken their work into the trenches, so why not the musicians? Several notable first performances have been given at orchestral concerts; and, speaking of concerts, you should hear some of the impromptu recitals! For singers will sing, you know!"

Ossip Gabrilowitsch does his own thinking, even as he plays his recitals after his own manner. The maker of programs for his set of "historical recitals" confessed that the difficult part was not "what to choose, but what to leave out."

"It is hard to say what shall represent certain phases of piano music's development," said he the other day. "For instance, d'Indy is without doubt one of the great men of modern French music, and yet I decided against his sonata for piano and chose works by Debussy because the latter opened up new vistas. Whatever may be said of Debussy's genius, whether or not it is a first rank genius or merely a talent of a high order, it remains a fact that he correlated the elements of the 'whole toned scale' and associated with it new color and harmonic and pedal effects. D'Indy, on the other hand, is logically a development from the school created by Cesar Franck."

Mention was made of Strawinsky and of Scriabin.

"Yes," Mr. Gabrilowitsch replied, "Scriabin has written considerably for the piano. Some of his last, and, I think, his most representative works are the sonatas, which may not be known here. Of Strawinsky [whose latest representation in Chicago was that of the three pieces for string quartette played by the Flonzaleys last Thursday afternoon] I cannot speak so comprehensively. I do not think, however, that he has defined any departure from piano methods of the day.

"While we are on this point, I want to emphasize one thing that we Ticket Brokers; Also the Art of O. Skinner, Esq.

By Percy Hammond.

CERTAIN sprightly remarks printed hereabouts last Sunday regarding ticket "scalping" have given offense to umbrageous theatergoers who are victims of the traffic. Numerous citations of flagrant managerial dishonors have been submitted to me, and it has been darkly hinted that I, as a pampered favorite of the box office, am blind to the evil behaviors of that malign institution. It was not my intention to incense further the outraged playgoer, but merely to suggest that the emboned aldermen, with no particular achievements to their credit, were not the functionaries to remedy so complex an ill. Also to infer that the theaters of Chicago are of as much importance to its inhabitants as the city council.

It was the purpose of the essay to recognize the ailment; to say that the managers know that it is a sickness which doth affect the very life blood of their enterprise, and to counsel a semi-intelligence in relieving it. I felt that I had the right so to do, since I am more or less on the outside of the matter, neither public, manager, nor broker. I, too, have suffered. Only week before last, purchasing a seat from Mr. Waterfall for the Cort, I was assured that it was on an aisle and near an exit. It was neither of them. Deportment of this kind on the part of the scalper does not endear me to his cause, and I beg to be absolved from the charge of partiality to him. But the illegitimate traffic in theater seats is a problem of profound perplexities, not to be solved in petulance. It may not be known that the government of New York, whose achievements in managing a city are only a little less than those of our own, has been unable to cope with the proposition. There the practice is general. I suspect that even Ald. Coughlin in his pilgrimages thither buys his theater seats at a premium from the pretty girl near the telephone booth without a murmur—of complaint. And I wonder if the athletically inclined alderman who yesterday was nicked for his tickets to the football game will advocate in his next manifestation of statesmanship the revocation of the license of the University of Chicago or the boiling in oil of A. Alonzo Stagg.

It is one of the minor discontents of conducting this column that I am never able to commend unequivocally attendance upon a performance by Mr. Otis Skinner. The reason for this discomfort is that I look upon Mr. Skinner as the most admirable, personally, of the players, a gentleman, a scholar, a kindly recipient of criticism of his infirmities, even though his critic, like Brutus, makes them greater than they are. A cleanly man of the world is he, a pleasant companion, in association with whom no scribbler of the stage can fail to be advantaged. Of himself he speaks but little, though his career (to me) is the most picturesque of any American actor. Of his art and its history he discourses sanely and lovingly, as no false fanatic, but as a knowing practitioner whose orisons combine intelligence with devotion.

Dr. Goldsmith once said of Mr. Garrick that on the stage he was "natural, simple, affecting; 'twas only when he was off that he was acting." This, reversed, may be spoken of Mr. Otis Skinner. If it is not encroaching crudely on Miss Amy Leslie's enviable domain I will recall an evening spent with Mr. Skinner and my predecessor at this desk, the much missed Mr. W. L. Hubbard. The time was midnight, twenty years ago; the scene Moran's oasis in Randolph street, where as a novice in the theater I learned from Mr. Skinner and Mr. Hubbard more about acting and the drama than hitherto I had coaxed from volumes of the Stagyrite and Brander Matthews. A few evenings previously I had used, in my lucubrations in the Evening Post, a perhaps stolen phrase saying that Mr. Skinner in "Francesca da Rimini" declaimed the lines "with the infallible accuracy of a pianola." How gently and unobtrusively was I informed of the power of rhythm, of the elegance and facility of the golden cadence of blank verse immaculately delivered! And how impressed was I by Mr. Skinner's human recital of his experiences, in which just enough of the glamour of adventure was retained to make them delightful! They clothed my bony ideals with needful tissue and sent me away, full of a suspicion that "illusion" is not the first essential of the theater.

Despite these instructions I never was able until last Monday night to square Mr. Skinner's stage proceedings with anything that I subsequently had learned about life. In the most casual circumstance he was gyrant, florid, symphonic, epic, and unreal. In his drama preceding this one, "The Unseen Voice," or something like that, he was Martian in his deviation from anything I had ever observed or heard in the way of a human being. So I gave him up. But now he comes along in "The Cock o' the Walk," playing an old time actor and making me feel just as he did years ago at Moran's in Randolph street—very humble. He knows how to act an old time actor.

Not, however, in the gaudy fashion that you would suppose. He is in this impersonation much more lifelike than he has been in characters more closely connected with the rules of superficial human conduct. He is a quiet, humorous, cynical, temperamental, drunken mummer (English), and he performs this role with no unnecessary embellishments.

But unhappily when Mr. Skinner is above par his playwright is otherwise. Mr. Henry Arthur Jones is my favorite dramatist, but his "Cock o' the Walk," I fear, is one of those things dashed off, as it were, for a private performance. As Miss Russell used to sing, "I Read the London Papers Every Day," but we are more or less immune to satire about knighted actors and their satellites, theatrical bishops. Fixed for Mr. Skinner, "Cock o' the Walk" becomes a mere exhibition. It is arranged so that each act ending finds him in dubious conflict with trouble, emerging possibly triumphant when again the curtain ascends. As Mr. Powys says, there are in Chicago no white violets; neither is there much interest in titled players or grotesque bishops. But when Anthony Bellchamber, in the person of Mr. Otis Skinner, intrigues it so that he can have a London triumph in Othello, indifference is overcome, and we are glad. Let us, if we have the time, the money, and the indifference to drama, attend the Blackstone while Mr. Skinner is there.

Medical Men Back Play, "The Unborn"

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special.]—A minor but significant incident of recent theatrical activities was the presentation, under the auspices of the Medical Review of Reviews, of another propaganda play, entitled "The Unborn"—being minor in that it is not a play that is likely to cause anything resembling a stir, and significant because it failed to duplicate in any particular the sensation aroused by M. Brieux's "Damaged Goods," produced two years ago under the same auspices.

"The Unborn" was written by Beulah Poynter, long known to the broad reaches of the hinterland as the authoress and principal actress of that stirring classic concerning home, mother, and the deity, "Lena Rivers." It may be said for Miss Poynter that it is a much better play than any one expected it would be. Save for a rhetorical bog in the second act, it holds together very well and reaches a tragic conclusion with some effect.

The story told is expected to serve as an argument favoring the legal control of the birth rate, and is excused by its promoters on the ground that it is a worthy addition to their "propaganda of enlightenment."

The principal protagonist is a young married woman who, knowing that there is a taint of insanity in her blood, objects to bearing children. She seeks medical interference with the ways of nature, and is repulsed by a physician, who admits the justice of her arguments but is bound by oath not to interfere.

Despite her efforts to prevent it, a son is born to her. He is frail, nervous, and physically subnormal. In his twentieth year he is seized with epilepsy, and, being denied the right to marry, kills both his fiancée and himself, the resultant shock driving his mother insane.

"With a sincere desire to limit the number of the offspring of the most prolific part of the human race—paupers, defectives, degenerates, the alcoholic, diseased, and insane—we make our plea for broader laws and a more humane attitude in respect to the problems of this play." So reads the program preface. We leave the decision to you.

Leo Ditrichstein and Arnold Daly have this much in common: They are, as they stand, the two most interesting figures among the male persons now serving the stage and drama in America. Most interesting because though they are actors of wide experience and considerable achievement, neither has as yet fully realized on the talent that is his or risen to the eminence the future most certainly should see him attain.

They are brought to mind thus comparatively because both came to town last week with new plays. One succeeded and one failed, but for no other reason than that one had a good play and the other a stupid play. Personally there was little choice between the paragraphs of praise which the experts allotted them, or the quality of the respective performances which they gave.

Ditrichstein, with the finer and more substantial training, is the more finished player, naturally, but it may fairly be doubted if in character analysis or keenness of insight he has any considerable advantage. In any event it is to these two as much as any other two men of our stage that we may look for future characterization of first importance.

The Ditrichstein play, written by the actor and the Hattons, Frederic and Fannie, is now called "The Great Lover," having shed two descriptive appendages in "$2,000 a Night," which was meaningless, and "Jean Paurel," which was nothing in particular. And for two acts it is a delightfully diverting comedy of temperaments.

Imagine, if you can, with the aid of such atmospheric fiction as you have absorbed, the office of the manager of a metropolitan opera company just before the opening of the season. Into it flock the returning singers from all parts of the world; into it are projected the new conductor of German opera and the new conductor of Italian opera, the old favorites and the would-be new sensations.

The atmosphere is filled with dialects, and, one suspects, with garlic. There is the returning soprano with a handbag filled with South American press notices; the returning baritone with a fixed idea as to those with whom he will sing and those with whom he will not; the returning Wagnerian tenor who refuses to oc-

NEWS of the THEATERS

Mrs. Richard Mansfield, replying to the statement of a clergyman that her husband had forbidden his son to become an actor, writes as follows to the Dramatic Mirror:

My Dear Mr. Schrader: I saw in the Dramatic Mirror today a letter saying that if I could be communicated with, I would, no doubt, disprove the statement that Richard Mansfield had forbidden his child to enter the theater because it was immoral. I am very glad to deny that statement. In your reply to the letter, you name exactly the reason why my husband would never permit his child to enter the theater, even to see his father act (a fact which I now bitterly regret). Richard Mansfield knew so well the sadness of life on the stage, the struggle for recognition, and then the struggle to hold the place once gained; the work, the study, the daily and then nightly toil—all this he knew and wished to spare his son. He used to say, "He shall be a writer, a lawyer, a farmer—anything but an actor." But not for the reason that the gentleman, called an evangelist, gives; for no man upheld the dignity of the stage more rigorously than Richard Mansfield. Alas, heredity is too strong; and my son is now fitting himself for the dramatic profession. He may be spared some of the privations through which his father passed; he cannot be spared the personal struggle and mental and spiritual travail. But he has learned from me to feel a pride in saying, "I am going to be an actor—to follow my father's profession." I hope he may always feel that pride and worthily uphold the dignity of the stage. I am very truly yours,

BEATRICE MANSFIELD,
The Grange, New London, Conn.

"Ashes," by Percy Fendall, is the means by which Mrs. Langtry will seek to entertain in vaudeville now that her tour in "Mrs. Thompson" is a failure. She is soon to be seen at the Majestic.

James K. Hackett's yearning to play "Macbeth" in the large cities is about to be satisfied, and he will have as his aid Miss Viola Allen. They will play other dramas by Shakspeare, too, "Othello," "Twelfth Night," "As You Like It," and "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

Miss Florence Reed and Malcolm Williams announce their marriage at Philadelphia last week. The romance thus suggested began years ago, when both were members of the stock company at the Chicago Opera house.

The divorce is announced of Mrs. Sam Sothern from her husband, a brother of E. H. Sothern.

Mme. Pavlowa in an advertisement printed in the New York Telegraph makes it known that she has no intention of becoming a performer in vaudeville.

Miss May Naudain, who withdrew from the stage some years ago on account of marriage, is to return to it as the prima donna of the new operetta, "Katinka," next week in Buffalo.

Nat Goodwin, acting Paul Armstrong's "In a Blaze of Glory," irked his vaudeville audiences in New York, so now he is reciting "Gunga Din" and imitating famous players for $2,000 a week.

MAJESTIC.

Ned Monroe and Keller Mack:

"If they let you alone long enough some squirrel will take you and lay you away for the winter."

"What are you looking at your watch for?"

"I want to see how long a person in your condition can live."

"I used to be a traveling man."

"What did you travel for?"

"Oh, something I did. The last town I made was Wheeling."

"What state is it in?"

"Oh, it is in an awful state."

McVICKER'S.

Kelcey and Symonds:

"Would you marry a spendthrift?"

"I might if he was just starting on his career."

"Spoken like a pirate."

"O, you brute!"

"For heaven's sake, don't cry."

"Don't be afraid—although there is nothing like tears to wash away a woman's sorrows."

"You mean a woman's complexion."

"The idea!"

"Do you paint?"

"That's my business."

"You certainly know your business."

"You men should be the last to say anything."

"We would if the women gave us a chance."

"I suppose you think a woman always has the last word?"

"No, not always. Sometimes she talks to another woman."

"I just went into a saloon and ordered two glasses of beer, and it didn't cost me a cent."

"How did you manage it?"

"I drank one and let the other one settle."

"Did you see that London chappy who just passed me on the street? He didn't seem to recognize me."

"That's because he's English, and you know how hard it is for an Englishman to see a 'joke.'"

PALACE.

"O, that's all right; so am I."

"Here, taste this. It may make you feel better."

"Great Caesar, what was it?"

"That was water."

"Do you know, I always imagined water would taste like that. May I use your phone?"

"Certainly."

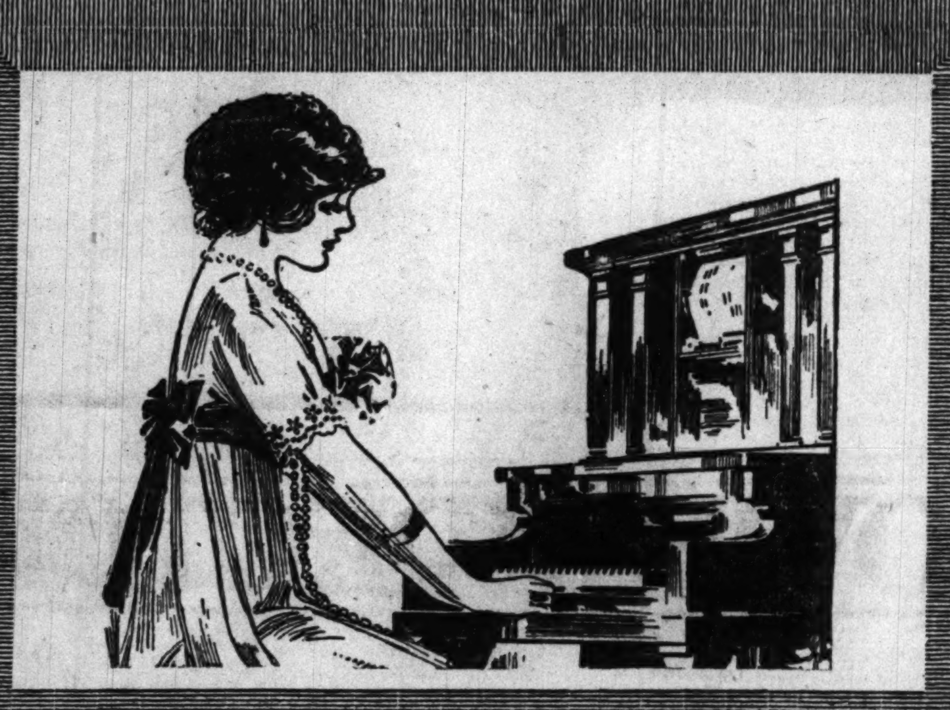
"Hullo. I want the bar."

"This is the gymnasium."

"But I want the bar?"

"What bar? The horizontal bar?"

"No, the old crow bar."



Piano and Player-Piano Luxury at Moderate Cost

You as a business man know the value of volume—and specialization. This is exclusively a piano store—the largest exclusive piano house in the West. For this reason alone you would naturally investigate our values before making your decision.

But there is another reason—this is the Home of the Celebrated Mason & Hamlin. No other instrument has ever aroused such enthusiasm on the part of musicians. It is the official piano of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, and the choice of hundreds of the leading concert pianists.

And then there's a more important reason still. These are the factory warerooms of the World's Greatest Manufacturers of Pianos and Inner-Player Pianos. We are piano makers as well as distributors and these salesrooms of ours are a veritable exposition of the very latest designs in the many precious woods and finishes.

Make Your Selection NOW from these Newest 1916 Models

The shop-in-haste days are almost upon you. Don't buy your piano that way. Well chosen, it will last a lifetime and give a lifetime's satisfaction. So come in NOW—this week—for there is an instrument for every taste and every purse.

The New Solo Carola Inner-Player
This is to be 1916's greatest sensation—it is the Miracle Player. Hear all the other leading makes and if permitted, try at least one selection on each of them yourself. Then come in and play on our Solo Carola. It's easily available magic—its beautiful tone qualities and perfect expression will speak for themselves—no need for argument on our part.

The New Conover Upright Style 46
Built under the supervision of J. Frank Conover, one of America's greatest Piano Builders—a man who has devoted over forty years to that single problem—TONE.

Midget Grand Piano
A $750 value for $585. It would lend a note of distinction to that music room of yours or that unfilled corner.

The New Art Style Kingsbury
A made-to-order model at no higher price than the regular designs.

The New Euphona Player
$200 lower in price than any former Inner-Player Piano.

The New Baby Grand Upright

Big City Ballads
by Berton Braley

THE ELEVATOR STARTER.

Within the hall he stands
 As proud as seven czars,
For wholly he commands
 The movements of the cars.
He is a man of power,
 Who must be held in awe,
And till the closing hour
 His lightest word is law!

He's wise to beggars' games,
 And agents who are bores;
He knows ten thousand names
 Upon some twenty floors;
With quick and kindling eyes
 He sees life as it goes,
And he is often wise
 To more than you suppose.

If frequently you lunch
 With some right pretty Jane,
He'll know it, by some hunch
 Which no one can explain.
He knows how some men drink,
 How some girls get their gowns,
For he's a crafty gink,
 Who knows your ups and downs.

And so, throughout the day
 He is the boss, the works.
He nods in royal way
 At office boys and clerks.
No light, familiar air
 His regal manner mars.
Believe me, he is there,
 The starter of the cars!

Russians feel about our own music. You, for instance, merely divide up our composers into groups like 'moderns' or 'ultra-moderns.' We find another classification. We have two racial influences in our people—one is the purely western European Russian and the other what we call the 'Slav' element. Borodin, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Glazounow, and others fall into the latter category; they derive their moods and their methods from an affected 'orientalism.' On the other hand, Tschaikowsky is the truest Russian among the Russian composers. Rachmaninoff, too, is not German in tendencies, as you feel, but fervently Russian. If you want a proof of Tschaikowsky's Russianism, look over the slow movement of his fourth symphony. Its melodies, and especially the first entrance of the solo oboe, are essentially Russian folk song.

"Still, with all the wealth of fantasy in our Russian composition, I must confess that I do not find any definite movement in piano literature toward new ideals."

The death of Theodor Leschetizky this last week removes from the musical world one of its most famous figures. The Polish teacher and composer has probably influenced directly more pianists of high rank than any other, unless it were the Abbé Liszt. Scattered all over the world are the missionaries of his faith, and his memory will be green in the hearts of generations of students to come.

He was born in Lancut, Austrian Poland, June 22, 1830. He was taught by his father and by the famous teachers of the previous generation, Czerny and Sechter. He was a member of the St. Petersburg conservatory faculty from 1852 to 1878, whence he went to Vienna. During these years such pianists as Siloti and Paderewski came under his influence. Mme. Bloomfield-Zeisler of this city is also one of his well known exponents.

Some few compositions he left—an opera and a few pieces for piano. His gift in this line seems to have been more that of the pedagogue than the poet, for the higher critic finds in them some definite problem of technique to be solved. Yet the facility and the directness of his composition, such as the Etude played recently by Alexander Raab on the occasion of his local debut, promise longevity for these peculiarly pianistic works.

"The Unborn" Is Latest Medic Propaganda Play.

cupy a dressing room so closely abutting that occupied by a Wagnerian soprano with a yipping poodle.

There are press agents and secretaries to add to the hubbub, and enough French, Italian, and German spilled in the greetings, explanations, expostulations, and demands to give the place a very fine suggestion of reality.

It is, however, in the second act that the best effect is gained in the projection of back stage atmosphere. The hero of the proceedings is Jean Paurel, 46 years old and the greatest baritone of his day. In the opera world he is a power; he dictates his terms, his associates, his appearances, and the rôles he will sing. Born of an Italian mother and a French father, he is twice a Latin and thrice a Don Juan.

But having come to [illegible] of some discretion he falls in love in America with a new soprano, an American girl about to negotiate her debut. He believes it is to be the great love of his life, and he is eager to marry her.

She, however, cares rather more for the younger baritone she met on the steamer coming over, the dashing Sonino who is destined to take Paurel's place. Still, like many progressives, she is willing to listen to reason, and when Paurel proves to her that he can make her in a season by insisting that she shall sing the principal rôles in those operas in which he appears and agrees to make her his protégé if she will marry him, she agrees.

Then it happens that an old love of Paurel's interferes and threatens to spoil the plan, which rouses the baritone to such a pitch of excitement that his voice fails him and young Sonino is sent on the stage to finish a performance of "Don Giovanni." This he accomplishes to a burst of wild enthusiasm on the part of the audience. A new favorite has arrived and the unhappy Paurel is dethroned.

When this scene opens the door of Paurel's dressing room is closed. When the first act of the opera is finished the door is opened and through the corridor at back the company troops by to its dressing rooms, a half hundred principals and choristers in costume, all humming bits of the score, congratulating each other, or starting to unloosen collars and belts preparatory to a change of gear.

Follow the ceremonious visits of the other singers to congratulate Paurel, the anxious visits of the manager, the querulous complaints of the singers, and the call of the hero worshipers whose husbands are heavy subscribers to the annual deficit.

It is all very colorful and entertaining and lifts the comedy, which otherwise is quite an ordinary bit of drama, far enough away from the conventional to guarantee its success.

It is in this setting that the Paurel voice breaks and here that, broken and in tears, he listens to the shouts greeting his young rival, knowing that his day as an idol has passed. A fine, dignified, convincing bit of acting on Mr. Ditrichstein's part that robs it of any suggestion of emotional bathos.

In the last act the barytone is induced to give up his American girl, who flies relievedly to the arms of her younger lover, while Paurel, dashing away the tears the first real sacrifice of his life has brought to his eyes, listens intently to the mumbled regrets of his valet over the phone to discourage a too ardent admirer of the great lover.

"Potter," queries the singer, "is that the little divorcee who called this afternoon? The one with the big brown eyes?"

"Yes, sir," meekly replies Potter.

And the play leaves him arranging a tete-a-tete at a suburban inn.

Mr. Daly's play was "The Angel in the House," written by Eden Phillpots and Macdonald Hastings, one a novelist and the other the interesting author of the equally interesting "The New Sin" played without a woman in the cast, and, you may recall, without a dollar profit in the box office till.

As "the angel" Daly was a sort of 42 year old Oscar Wilde. It was his devoted mother who said he would prove an angel in any house, and at her death she wished him into the household of a former lover.

There he arrived, surrounded by impossible luggage and inspired by a marvelous egotism and an affected enthusiasm for cubist and futurist painters. Immediately he begins tearing his poor old host's house to pieces, taking down his pictures, redecorating his lawn, and arranging eugenic marriages for his daughters.

But he proves an awful bore after the first half hour, although he is splendidly acted by Daly. In the last act he is hooked by an amorous widow and matrimony's the end of him. "The Angel" only lasted a week, and Daly returns to moving pictures to earn more money to produce another. Some day, we hope and believe, he will strike the right part, in the right play, and when he does another native genius will come into his reward.

Grace George, as actress-manager, is doing a lot of fussy little things to make the playhouse a different sort of theatrical institution. She opened her performance of "The Liars" this week with a darkened stage and an off-scene victrola quartet to give the atmosphere of a lawn fête or music in the drawing room after dinner, or something of that sort. We did not decide just what it was, but it was quite cute and feminine.

Being her own manager is proving quite a tonic for this pleasant and gifted comedienne. It seems to have reattached her slipping interest in the drama to the trend of current events.

The other day she decided that inasmuch as she had begged, bribed, and browbeaten several native dramatists in an effort to extract a play from them that should be suited to her particular talents, without getting the play, she would now offer a prize to amateurs.

Whereupon she agreed to give any member of any playwriting class in any college in America $1,000 cash and a Broadway production for any play that she could use.

She hopes thus to stimulate interest and also to get results. She needs a new play and needs it badly, and she figures that if out of Harvard there should come an Edward Sheldon, to write a half dozen successes, and Fred Ballard the write "Young America," the best American comedy of this particular season; and Cleaves Kinkead to write "Common Clay," which is still doing business at its new stand, the Republic theater, where it started last August, there may be another genius or two yet to be uncovered."

Of course she realizes that Prof. Baker has had something like 150 students in his playwriting classes who have not as yet landed, but still there is always a chance. Meantime she is giving a perfectly joyous performance of Lady Jessica in "The Liars," which revives very well, indeed.

Miss George has also inspired competition. Ethel Barrymore has now announced her intention of becoming an actress-manager. She will, she says start in by organizing a second "Our Mrs. McChesney" company, drill it, and send it to the far reaches of the country, which she will be unable to visit for some months, judging from her success at home.

If the venture succeeds, and there is no reason why it should not, save a natural lack of interest in the comedy with the comedienne left out, she will consider taking over the direction of her own affairs and become an actress-manager in very truth.

"I have always followed reverently in the footsteps of my grandmother, Mrs. John Drew," explains Miss Ethel. "I married, as she did; I am rearing my family, as she did, and I hope some day to become as good an actress and manager as she was."

And there are a great many reasons why one is inclined to believe that she will succeed.

The Notebook of an Ex-Society Editor

BY EDITH BROWN KIRKWOOD

"Elder Sister" Is Now Object of Admiration Not for Sympathy.

CAROLYN WILSON one day last week had published a letter in which she wrote of the widespread "grouch" of the Englishmen and their growing antagonism toward America. Just about the same time Charles Grasty, erstwhile Kansas City, St. Paul, and Baltimore newspaper owner and publisher, but more recently Associated Press representative in England and France, was telling a group of interested listeners at the University of Minnesota that when the present war was over "the United States will not have a friend on the globe—not one, no matter how it is encircled."

Mr. Grasty is lecturing on war and war sentiments as he found them, that being the present universal topic, and along with some rather poignant suggestions he is telling a few tales out of print—such, for instance, as the friendliness of our country when the nations cease their strife. Why? Well, partly because we are growing rich on war profits, and the man who holds the purse strings is not popular, except when his money is needed!

As I read Miss Wilson's letter and heard Mr. Grasty's remarkable address I thought of the hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of dollars America has poured into grief and poverty stricken Europe that suffering might be alleviated; of the men and boys and women and girls who, from coast to coast of our land, have joined thought and time and sympathy in their effort to do something for those in need across the waters; of the constant appeal, through press and personal emissaries, the countries abroad have made to our American temperament, with unwavering success; of the work of our busiest and most efficient men and women in collecting great funds that the hungry might be fed; of the medical and nursing skill which has been contributed, and then Mr. Grasty's words came again with "not a hand will there be to be lifted in our behalf." The good work of the many has not been able to keep pace with the increasing wealth of the few!

Continuous Call for Aid.

A few days later on another of THE TRIBUNE's pages (close neighbor to Miss Wilson's letter), there was recorded the organizing of another bandage sewing group of young women, this time for the British wounded, and with Miss Edith Blair as organizer. Lady Herbert had founded this "British auxiliary" on her visit of last spring.

I presume it is difficult for a war maddened mind to appreciate the value of a bandage against that of the shell which creates the wound for the bandage to bind, but Europe, whatever it thinks of us and our enlarging hoard, continues to send her women diplomats to us to wring hearts and minds and pocketbooks with success.

Miss Edith Blair, by the way, who is the elder daughter of the Edward Blairs, is one of the wealthier young women of America, who, apparently, has dedicated her life—in an unostentatious way—to the maimed and the halt and the blind. Ever since she came out she has been giving so much of her time to the teaching or the care of the children of the slum districts, or to some other group of that company said always to be with us. In this her co-worker has been her chum, Miss Mabel Linn, who must almost seem her relative now that Miss Blair's sister is the wife of Miss Linn's brother, Howard Linn, and Miss Linn's sister is the wife of Miss Blair's cousin, Cyrus McCormick.

The "Elder Sisters."

And while we are talking of Miss Blair and Miss Linn, do you realize that they are splendid representatives of a constantly increasing group of young women whom the old time novelists were pleased to designate—with voices adrip with tears—as "the elder sisters?" Being an "elder sister" in the days of the glucose novel was a terrible thing. It carried with it such responsibilities as to getting out of the way matrimonially that the younger sisters might emerge from seclusion, that the rôle was none too enviable.

Just what would the old time novelist do if he were to come back to earth at this time and attempt to win sympathy for this young woman who not only has refused to get out of the way, but has refused to be in the way by stepping aside and letting the younger sisters outdistance her in the race to the altar? Race, did I say? Even that is old fashioned. There is no race to the altar for the girls of today. They amble quite independently of seasons out, or more youthful sisters to be introduced, or the opinions of others, or the customs of the years gone by. They care not, neither do they weep. They are a saucy lot.

Miss Edith Blair is one of the most exquisitely beautiful young women Chicago society ever has been able to claim as its own. Her beauty is less brilliant than that of her lovely sister, Lucy, now Mrs. Linn, but it is more delicate and wonderfully appealing. Miss Mabel Linn, too, is a noted beauty—daintily small and finely featured, with glorious dark eyes and hair—a foil to her younger sister, Mrs. McCormick, who is fair, with the skin and eyes that go with such a mass of copper gold hair as is hers. At the weddings of these younger sisters both Miss Blair and Miss Linn served as maids of honor. Were they pining away with chagrin, as "other times, other manners" (or was it customs?) would have pictured them? Not a bit of it. They were as radiantly happy over the festive occasions as they were lovely.

Of course, the United States has a shining example of the elder sister in Miss Margaret Wilson, eldest of the three daughters of President Wilson. Miss Wilson not only has permitted both of her younger sisters to marry before she has gone to the altar, but she promises to let her father do so as well.

Interesting Set in Chicago.

Chicago has a most interesting set of elder sisters. There is Mrs. Harry Harvey, the second of the four daughters of Dr. and Mrs. E. C. Dudley, who, when she married some three or four years ago, not only had the assistance of her one older and two younger sisters in the planning of her wedding but in the remaking of a little old building up on the north side into a home, very original in its decorations and schemes.

There is Miss Adele Barrett, the oldest of the four daughters of the late S. E. Barrett, who has remained unwed while her three younger sisters became wives—Juliet, who is Mrs. George Rublee of New York and Cornish, N. H.; Alice, who is Mrs. Arnold Scudder; and Winifred, who married Francis Taylor—a marriage which gave much promise of success at the beginning but which was ended in the divorce of the Taylors last autumn.

Last year this elder sister company grew apace. Miss Amy Waller, now Mrs. James Field, let her younger sister, Harriet, become Mrs. Paul Welling nearly a year before she married. Miss Julie Manierre, with an elder sister married, let her younger sister, Wilhelmine, become a bride, and this year she brought out a still younger sister. Miss Aerielle Frost, who has not been "out" so very many seasons as yet, served as maid of honor at the wedding of her next younger sister, Lusilie, and Joseph Frazer of Nashville, Tenn., and this year she will assist in the presentation of the third sister. Miss Marjorie Edwards of golfing fame attended her sister, Dorothy, as maid of honor when she became a bride now some two years or more ago, and eighteen months ago Miss Grace and Miss Edna Dixon, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Dixon, were in the bridal party of their sister, Elsie, baby and favorite of a large family, when she married Walter Faithorn. Incidentally they are today the devoted aunts to the Faithorn baby of recent presentation.

For a little while it seemed as if the recent Miss Helen Cudahy, now Mrs. Austin Niblack, meant to permit her younger sister, Florence, to marry before she did so, for Miss Florence's betrothal to Vaughan Spalding was announced before that of the present Niblacks. If I am not mistaken, Miss Edith Huntington Mason, who in October married Morgan Armstrong, was an elder sister for a few years, and Miss Katherine Dummer, now Mrs. Walter T. Fisher, was one of the youngest of a large family of unmarried sisters. The latest addition to this company is Miss Suzette Ryerson, daughter of Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, whose younger sister, Emily, was married in October to George Hyde Clark of New York.

Doing Things Worth While.

What means it all? Here is a colony of "elder sisters" every one of whom is famed for her beauty, her philanthropies, her sportsmanship, or her public activities. Some have even more than one of these credits. There are Miss Blair, of whom you have read, and Miss Linn, who in addition to her rare good looks and her charities has studied agriculture at the University of Wisconsin that she might better understand the management of her estate near Sarasota, Fla., and the family farm in northern Illinois where she delights to spend much of her time. The Dudley sisters, each known for some individual talent; Amy Walker Field, whose activities in the Woman's Trade Union league brought her more fame than she had meant to woo (and who also was a Junior league president of wonderful record); Miss Edwards, who not only wins golf championships but has been a Service club "standby"; the Misses Dixon, whose activities and personal talents have kept the Service club alive and whose charities are as wide as the city; Mrs. Armstrong, who is a writer of books and short stories; Miss Manierre, who is a lyric soprano of note; Miss Ryerson, who has made a special study of social welfare work—they are all so worth while!

What meaneth it? Are these "outside interests" the answer? Maybe so, maybe not. They are neither seeking nor giving an answer. But one thing is sure—the old fashioned elder sister plot has joined the small boy's apple core—there "ain't goin' to be none" anymore.

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

NOVEMBER

The Chickadee

TO come out strong the Chickadee needs a snow flurry. Give him a low, lead colored sky and a northeast wind, stiff, but not too violent; horizons which seem to have crept in and to be intimate at the other end of the woods; snow in the cups of the curled leaves and spits of snow in the air.

Then the chickadee is the brave and pert bit of feathers and song that gives animation to the brown outdoors when the blue jay is a crestfallen bravo, the downy woodpecker merely voracious and the nuthatch and sapsucker, although vital and nimble, mostly silent.

A bit of suet makes the chickadee a friend; will make a dozen or more friends. With good fortune the wintering blue jay is avoided. With all his bravery of spirit and color he is not a decoration of winter. He has the appearance of a bird in reduced circumstances; if not a mendicant at least unhappy. The occasional cardinal which will be tempted by an evident source of food to stay in the brown and white woods is, with all his exotic brilliance, a bird that more nearly belongs.

Of them all—nuthatch, junco, sapsucker, woodpecker — the chickadee is the winter bird. He clings to the far north long after the geese and ducks have gone. He snuggles down toward the habitations of men when inclemency begins to silence life. The flirt and hop of his cheerful ways deny that the outdoors can be completely ice bound.

In the morning, when the sun melts the snow at the edge of the roof and the eaves drip, the sound of his cheery pipe will arise. Even as the drifts pile up his cheeriness does not abate. The black cap chickadee is the true snow bird.

Blue Grass Country Fine Field for Auto Tourists.

This is the second of a series of articles on southern touring which will appear in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE.

"THIS IS KENTUCKY."

"Not the oldest, nor yet the youngest; not the richest, nor yet the poorest; not the largest, nor yet the least; but take it all in all, for men and women, for flocks and herds, for fields and skies, for happy homes and loving hearts, the skies, for happy homes and lovin ghearts, the best place outside heaven the good Lord ever made."

By Reed L. Parker.

KENTUCKY has never been considered by northern motorists to be more than a skirmishing ground. Clouds of them year by year have gone into the Blue Grass country, but few indeed, pleasure bent have broken through the veil of mystery surrounding the hill country to the west. Numbers have crossed the Ohio, their tours centering around the three great racecourses at Louisville, Latonia, and Lexington, but the great unknown beyond has held forth no attractions. To the average tourist from Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, and Minnesota, Kentucky was a "dark and bloody ground" to be best known as a picturesque background for weird tales of illiteracy and ignorance, the home of moonshiner, night rider, feudist

Kentuckians feel keenly their reputation among the people to the north of them. Long ago they realised the literature of the "Well, Nell, gal, them city folks can do you'uns no good" type gave them unwelcome publicity. They knew that to be understood they must encourage intimacy. They wanted tourists. The roads of the state always have had a bad reputation. This reputation was largely undeserved.

One cannot stand on the banks of the Ohio river and ascertain the condition of the highways at Elizabethtown. The native Kentuckian is weak on propaganda. He wouldn't advertise his virtues—not for a good deal. People must come and see for themselves, he said. Consequently the state more than a decade ago passed laws which would permit the purchase of toll roads and turnpikes. A state aid system was devised. Good highways were built all over the lowlands. It is doubtful if there are better roads anywhere in the United States than one will find in the Blue Grass country.

Unfortunately for the hill country road improvement was, by law, placed in the hands of the counties. The hill counties were notoriously poor. They wanted roads everywhere, but there weren't enough taxpayers to build them.

"We were just about desperate up here," I heard a mountaineer say at Elizabethtown a month ago. "We didn't have money, and we needed roads badly. We didn't have inspiration; we couldn't even pay for repairing the old pike and it was in terrible shape."

Hill Country Aroused.

It's a fact that they were apathetic toward the subject of roads in the uplands. Only one good road furnished them with access by wagon to the outside world and this was in bad condition. It was the Louisville-Nashville turnpike, a perfect highway for thirty years before the war, but after that a road rougher than the corduroys of the northern peninsula. It was seldom that a motor car was seen on the turnpike and one was never found on the hill rails.

This was the condition of road affairs in Kentucky when the Dixie highway movement was launched. There was a doubt when the commissioners met at Chattanooga whether the highway should enter the south via Louisville or whether it should use Lexington in the Blue Grass region for its gateway. The entire hill country was aroused. A great delegation went from Louisville, Elizabethtown, Munfordsville, Bowling Green, Russellville, and other towns along the old turnpike to lay their case before the commissioners at Chattanooga. It was agreed by the commissioners that the main line of the highway should follow the old turnpike and that a section should run from Lexington to Knoxville. There began a great race between those residing along the main line and those in the section, realizing that the first to finish the road would have the advantage of getting the early travelers.

Judge D. W. Rider of Elizabethtown, the county seat of Hardin county, was made president of the Louisville-Nashville division and to him was intrusted the task of getting the highway prepared for the first annual inspection trip of the commissioners the following October. Judge Rider had 208 miles of road under his jurisdiction. He immediately began a personal appeal to the people along the highway.

The great opportunity had come. Every one took the work seriously. Money came from sources thought barren. A year later I saw 148 miles of the road completed and the remainder under work. All was passable, and I believe from my observations along the route that it is possible to average twenty miles an hour between Louisville and Nashville. I understand the road from Lexington to Knoxville is in even better condition, so that in the course of a year Kentucky has provided itself two great trunk line roads, one which taps the Blue Grass country, the other taking the motorist through hills rich in 200 years of historical lore.

Historic Points Around Louisville.

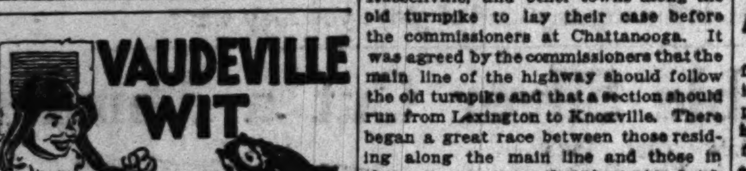
One enters Kentucky over the established route from Indiana at Louisville, via the old Paoli-Louisville stage road to French Lick. There is a toll bridge across the Ohio at New Albany.

Louisville is the largest city in Kentucky. There are a dozen or more fine hotels in the city which will accommodate the pocketbook of any tourist. At the hotels or from the Louisville convention and publicity bureau one may obtain guide books to historic points in the city and immediately surrounding it. Personally I have pleasant recollections of a trip through the manufacturing section of the city, around which the scenes of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" were laid; the Churchill Downs racecourse, where abide

". . . the graces three,
In eternal harmony,
Maiden, equine, julep, all
Linked to a convivial thrall,"

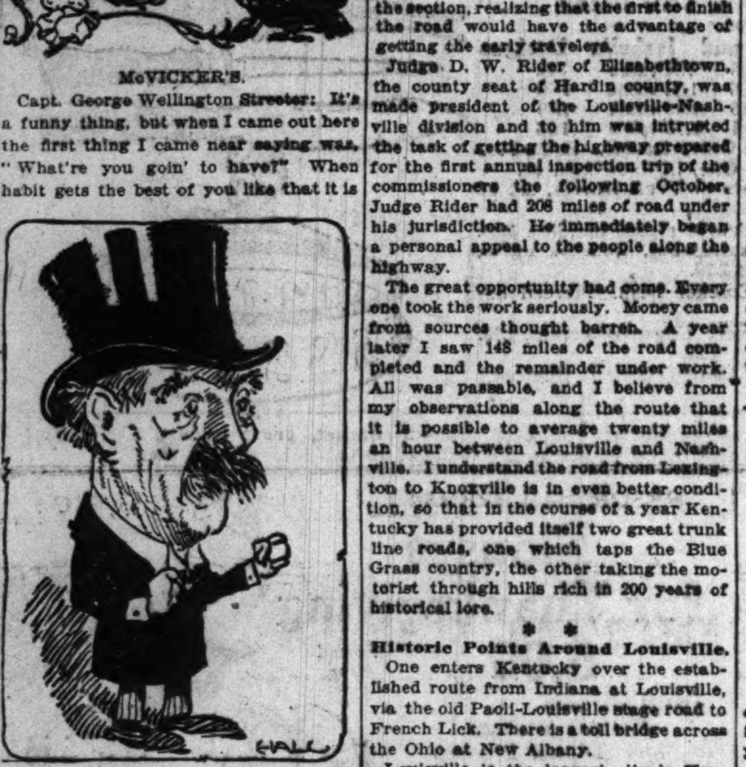
the Daniel Boone statue, Louis Philippe's former home, the tomb of President Zachary Taylor, hero of Okechobee, Resaca de la Palma, and Monterey; the Galt house; the site of old Fort Nelson, built in 1782; the tobacco market, and the several parks.

Leaving Louisville one may travel south over a fine metal road as far as the crossing over Salt creek, famed for an incident in Henry Clay's campaign for the presidency which Clay always claimed defeated him. Clay was being rowed up the Ohio to conclude his campaign at Louisville with a speech intended to summarize all his national views. Political enemies rowed the boat, and when the junction of Salt creek and the Ohio was reached the rowers convinced Clay his way to Louisville lay up Salt creek, claiming it was the Ohio. Clay missed his engagement at Louisville. At least this is the story they tell in Kentucky. It sounds reasonable, and makes Salt creek something more than a mere stream of water. South of Salt creek one should stop for an instant at West Point, the center of the first joint maneuvers of the regular army and companies of militiamen some fourteen years ago.



McVICKER'S.

Capt. George Wellington Streeter: It's a funny thing, but when I came out here the first thing I came near saying was, "What're you goin' to have?" When habit gets the best of you like that it is almost impossible to quit. Take Bryan for instance. They had to make him quit. And speaking of habit, I'll bet Bill Bryan won't be able to resist the habit of running for president again next year. That's where I've got the best of Bill. I've been the boss of the deestrik of Lake Michigan ever since I discovered it. Wait and see if I'm not right.



PALACE.

Cressy and Dayne:

"You get lots of patent medicine ads for these sign boards, don't you?"

"Yes, but they always pay with medicine."

"Do you ever have any shows here?"

"O, yes. The best we ever had was 'The Merry Widow.' Not a man in town spoke to his wife for a week after it left. My father fainted after the first act. We've had to keep him in the barn ever since because he acts like this (executes a fantastic dance)."

"If he wants to dance like that you'd better keep him in the barn."

"What's the matter with this car?"

"The engine is missing."

"When did you first miss it? Say, what kind of a carburetor have you got?"

"It's a St. Bernard."

"It sounds more like a Spitz."

"This machine is just like a man. It sputters, kicks, and balks all day and gets lit up at night."

"Yes, it's like a woman, too. You've got to get a license to run it, and it takes a long time before you learn how to steer it."

"After all, there's one part of this car that reminds me most of all of my husband."

"What is it?"

"It's the tank. Have you been married?"

Lincoln Highway Completes Successful Year.

By L. M. Steffens.

AN interesting financial summary for the first year of its existence has been issued by the Lincoln Highway association. The review includes statements relative to the cost of the original survey, the names of the men who solidly backed the enterprise with money, the several sources of revenue for the first year, a list of founders who gave $1,000 each, the cost of running the home office, and a list of contributing companies.

The report shows that it cost six men $21,701.34 to inaugurate the highway plan. The "angels" were Henry B. Joy, Carl G. Fisher, Albert Y. Gowan, Roy D. Chapin, Frank A. Seiberling, and John N. Willys, five of whom are directly interested in the automobile business, and the sixth a cement manufacturer. They paid an equal amount to the original fund. Later each gave $2,000 more towards the enterprise. All five are "founders," so it is evident the Lincoln highway cost them the first year approximately $7,000 each.

The summary names an additional list of the founders. They are:

James A. Allison	Indianapolis, Ind
Arthur C. Newby	Indianapolis, Ind.
T. Coleman du Pont	Wilmington, Del.
Henry E. Bodman	Detroit, Mich.
Edward Ford	Rossford, O.
Emory W. Clark	Detroit, Mich.
E. E. Placek	Wahoo, Neb.
John M. Studebaker	South Bend, Ind.

Thirty-three thousand barrels of cement were donated to the Lincoln highway by seven cement companies. Other concerns contributed small sums to the highway, and a revenue was also derived from a road guide. The total contributions amounted to thousands of dollars, all of which was expended towards promoting the highway. Only $29.66 was left in the treasurer's hands at the end of the first year.

The expense of running the home office and of distributing propaganda was about $25,000.

The financial aid extended to the organization in the second year exceeded the record of the first year, contrary to predictions, with a result that $2,500,000 has been expended for improvement to date.

Reports on the condition of the highway from New York to San Francisco show there has been extensive improvement in every state.

In New Jersey, the stretch between Jersey City and Trenton may be called perfect, every mile being either of concrete or macadam.

A great amount of improvement has been completed in Pennsylvania, where the mountain routes have been gradually reconstructed. Effort in this state has been concentrated on the abolition of toll roads and grade crossings. Gov. Brumbaugh has given his support, and $225,000 has been appropriated by the state toward that work alone. During the last eighteen months Pennsylvania has expended a total of $510,000 for work on the Lincoln highway.

The Lincoln Highway association looks forward confidently to a third year of continued support and progress and anticipates the growing public support of every section of the country in what has become a national enterprise.

Officers for the coming year were elected as folows: Henry B. Joy, president; Carl G. Fisher, vice president; Roy D. Chapin, vice president; Emory W. Clark, treasurer; Austin F. Bement, secretary.

CANIS MAJOR AND ITS STARS

POSITION OF THE STARS AT 10 O'CLOCK TONIGHT SHOWING SIRIUS

SIRIUS.

ABOUT 10 o'clock tonight there will be fairly above the eastern horizon the brilliant star Sirius. To see Sirius comprehendingly for the first time is to submit to a forthwith sensation. To see it coming into the evening sky, even when expected and looked for, is to come really into a sense otherwise vague of the infinity of space and the relative vastness and insignificance of its suns.

They are relatively vast as their dimensions are intelligently compared with that of our own sun, to us dazzling, to the universe inconsiderable. They are relatively insignificant when they are put against an intelligent conception of what lies beyond them.

Sirius of all the stars suggests something comparable to the brilliance of our nearby sun. It needs no definition of ways by which it may be found. It asserts itself. It cannot be mistaken, even with the great placid light of the planet Jupiter in the heavens. It is dynamic and at white heat, twinkling with the radiation of its own forces. It is superior to every point of light in the sky other than those of our own sun's system.

More than any other star it reveals immensity. Greater suns than Sirius are so many light years distant that they present themselves inconspicuously in the sky and do not start the imagination. Sirius fills the eye. It makes apparent the fact that there can be what the eye instinctively denies, a greater sun than our own.

It is known as the Dog star because the constellation of which it is the principal star had its heliacal rising in the hot days of autumn. Its color is brilliant white, with a touch of blue and green. It shows tints of ruby and amethyst.

It is the white symbol of snow. It rules the winter sky. Its diameter is about fifteen times that of our sun. It gives forth, it is variously estimated, from thirty to forty times as much light as the sun. It is younger in evolution than the sun, and being in this gaseous state exceeds the sun in mass only about three times.

Its brilliance to human eyes is largely due to the fact that it is the nearest of the great suns. In the constellation of Orion are suns which far exceed it in luminosity, but they are so much farther away than Sirius that their brilliance is wasted.

"Will you please tell be in your question column if De Palma has ever driven a Stutz car in any big races of the last two years? H. G."

De Palma drove a Stutz car at the opening of the Omaha speedway on Nov. 7 and in the Astor cup race, New York, on Oct. 9.

"I am the owner of an automobile which is made in Milan, Italy, called the Isotta No. 367. I would like to have the address of the nearest agency that handles this car."

The nearest agency that handles the Isotta is the Isotta-Fraschini Motor company, 1920 Broadway, New York.

"What does the 'D. A.' sign painted on the telephone poles between Chicago and Lafayette signify? Is it a section of the Dixie highway? W. N. P., Chicago."

The "D. A." sign which is painted on the telephone poles south of Chicago through Crown Point and Rensselaer to Lafayette is the Dixie Airline route. This is an individual road organization and is not affiliated with the Dixie highway. The Airline route is the road south of Chicago which goes to Indianapolis via Lafayette and was considered by the officials of the Dixie highway as a substitute for the road through Danville to Indianapolis. There is only one and nine-tenths miles of dirt road via the Airline route to Indianapolis, the balance being good gravel and macadam.

"Would my New York state chauffeur's license be of any value in Illinois? If not, where could I get an application? "G. N., Chicago."

The New York state chauffeur's license is good for sixty days in Illinois. After that time you will have to apply to the secretary of state for a permanent license. An application blank can be obtained at room 304 city hall.

Because — — —

Point for point right down the list this car is dollar for dollar the dominant value in this year's remarkable market.

Then came a performance test of unprecedented magnitude—a record output in everyday service.

The verdict was swift and sure.

On top of this record sale, buying continued in ever-increasing volume.

It is a clear case of dominant value conclusively determined.

To- you are invited to a regular soup to Sunday dinner. You'll find the liter- viands so novel, though, that I'm sure 'll admit you couldn't have done jus- to them in the regular tabloid form.

Everybody knows "The Raven." "The " clang the name of their author in line of their rhythmic resonance. Annabelle Lee" is a household classic.

For one who is so well known as a poet, Allen Poe has left the slenderest remains that I know of—in all only -nine poems. "Poetry has been with a passion, not a purpose," Poe said a passion which he indulged very indeed.

Searchers despaired of finding more of work. R. H. Stoddard, one of the best of the editors of Poe, once declared that "a new and well authenticated poem Poe will never be possible at this date " And now a diligent lover of discovered three new and hitherto known poems. Sixty-two that makes total.

The most important of the three poems a manuscript which has been given the of "Life's Vital Stream," from the It is entirely in the poet's hand- It was found among a mass of manuscripts belonging to the old counting house of Ellis & Allen of Richmond, Va., which are now in the library of congress, Washington:

LIFE'S VITAL STREAM.

Flow softly, gently, vital stream;
Ye crimson lifedrops stay;
Indulge me with this pleasing dream
Thro' an eternal day.

See, see, my soul, her agony!
See how her eyeballs glare!
Those shrieks, delightful harmony,
Proclaim her deep despair.

Rise, rise, infernal spirits, rise,
Swift dart across her brain
Thou Horror, with blood chilling cries,
Lead on thy hideous train.

O feast, my soul, revenge is sweet;
Louisa, take my scorn.
Curs'd was the hour that saw us meet,
The hour when we were born.

The thick writing paper upon which the is written is the same as that upon are set down copies of poems which made, and it is the paper which the & Allen counting house used in its This evidence seems to fix the Poe spent at his foster father's ware- from January, 1827, to the early of March of the same year, which an interesting addition to the sta- about Poe's life.

The other two poems were both found in Magazine. The old leather copy of the magazine for 1845-46 once owned by Mrs. Frances Sargent Osgood, Poe's romance with whom was most spectacular of his many intense platonic associations with his women She marked these poems as and some of her own, and the evi- is undeniable that they were the of that fantastic genius—although are nothing particularly memorable themselves.

story which Mrs. Osgood wrote for Magazine for August, 1845, and may readily be taken as a colored of her meeting with Poe, she says: bids me tell him that I love him as as if he had . . . a divine to demand my love." It was in ref- to the "divine right" in her story Poe responded in the October num- with lines signed "P.":

THE DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS.

The only king by right divine
Is Ellen King, and were she mine
I'd strive for liberty no more,
But hug the glorious chains I wore.

Her bosom is an ivory throne,
Where tyrant virtue reigns alone;
No subject vice dare interefere
To check the power that governs here.

O! would she deign to rule my fate
I'd worship kings and kingly state,
And hold the maxim all life long
The king—my king—can do no wrong.

Mrs. Osgood often used the pen name Ellen, it is certain that she is the one in the poem.

The other new poem was written by Poe to Mrs. Osgood's verses sent to him in the character of his "Israfel" lines. It appeared in Graham's Magazine for December, signed "P.":

STANZAS.

Lady! I would that verse of mine
Could fling all lavishly and free,
Prophetic tones from every line
Of health, joy, peace in store for thee.

Thine should be length of happy days,
Enduring joys and fleeting cares,
Virtues that challenge envy's praise,
By rivals loved, and mourned by heirs.

Thy life's free course should ever roam
Beyond this bounded earthly clime,
No billow breaking into foam
Upon the rock girt shore of time.

The gladness of a gentle heart,
Pure as the wishes breathed in prayer,
Which has in others' joys a part,
While in its own all others share.

The fullness of a cultured mind,
Stored with the wealth of bard and sage,
Which error's glitter cannot blind,
Lustrous in youth, undimmed in age;

The grandeur of a guileless soul,
With wisdom, virtue, feeling fraught,
Gliding serenely to its goal,
Beneath the eternal sky of thought:

These should be thine, to guard and shield,
And this the life thy spirit live,
Blest with all bliss that earth can yield,
Bright with all hopes that heaven can give.

Did you read those articles which Rudyard Kipling wrote from the western front in France? They gained for their author more censure and more praise than any other writer of red blood and fire and the pastime of kings has had heaped upon him. They are now, with the addition of "France," the poem which Mr. Kipling wrote two years ago when President Poincaré visited England, in book form under the title, "France at War—On the Frontier of Civilization" (Doubleday-Page).

May Sinclair, whose latest book was "A Journal of Impressions in Belgium" (Macmillan), has just finished her new long novel. "There isn't a bit of what is known as 'sex stuff' in it, or any gloom or overintellectuality. It is full of humor and loveableness. It will more nearly rival 'The Divine Fire' than anything Miss Sinclair has written since," confides a friend of hers who has read the manuscript.

Compton Mackenzie, whose new novel, "Plasher's Mead" (Harper), has just been published in this country, is fighting with the English forces in the Dardanelles. When he left his home in Capri last April, as soon as he had finished the manuscript of the novel, for a staff appointment with Sir Ian Hamilton he wrote: "I cease for a while to be a novelist and become instead a lieutenant to the royal marines. I think the experience will be wonderful if I can only keep fit."

If you have a poetry appetite that is just a little jaded hurry off to a book store and get yourself "The Rocky Road to Dublin" (Macmillan). It's from the pen—and heart—of James Stephens, who has written memorable things in prose and verse full of Irish fantasy, irony, bitter-sweet humor. They are things of rare beauty and unforgettable charm. Witness "The Crock of Gold," which I'm sure you'll never forget if you once beheld its treasures.

Yes, the unpretentious looking volume with "Jerusalem" (Doubleday-Page) and Lagerlöf on the back, which you see on the book shelves of the discriminating, is the latest novel of Selma Lagerlöf, the daughter of a Swedish clergyman, the only woman who has ever received the Nobel prize for literature.

"Why has Jean Webster such a passion for orphan asylums?" queries a correspondent. "Is she Judy herself?" No, she isn't Judy, but she does know a lot about asylums. When she was a student at Vassar she found an orphan asylum in Poughkeepsie the most interesting thing in her out of school world, and she has never lost interest in orphans and their homelessness. She made a systematic investigation of all the "homes" she could find before she wrote "Dear Enemy" (Century), so it isn't just a story. You knew that she's Mrs. Glen Ford McKinney since September, didn't you?

Gossip of the Auto Trade

J. D. DORT, president of the Dort Manufacturing company of Flint Mich., was here last week to confer with J. R. Buck of the McDuffee company, his local representative, regarding plans for the Chicago show, which opens Jan. 22. According to Dort increased demand and the decision of his company to increase its production facilities make it possible to sell the 1916 model 5 touring car equipped with electric starting and lighting outfit and demountable rims for $650. The 1915 car sold for $680. That the Dort is an excellent car was shown by the success of the company in disposing of its 1915 product at the Chicago and New York shows last year.

John Willys always springs a surprise about this time of the year. His latest is the announcement that he is building a model 75 Overland touring car to sell at $615 and roadster at $595. Here are a few of the new model's specifications: Electric starting and lighting system, high tension magneto, 104 inch wheel base, cantilever springs, four inch tires, demountable rims, and stream line body. The motor is four cylinder, long stroke, and the horse power is 20-25. The Overland production capacity has been increased to 600 cars a day, which, according to officers of the company, makes possible the low prices. Model 83 will continue to sell at $750 and the seven passenger car at $1,145.

Worthy of special mention is the fact he was not arrested for speeding.

Only at Rothschilds' could there be such a sale as this! It is a classic. The fame of its wonderful values year after year has given it a power and prestige surpassing any event of its kind in Chicago. It has been in preparation for weeks. No hastily planned event could hope to stand beside this in scope or in genuine merit of the merchandise. And behind these weeks of intensive selection are the years of experience with former sales which are necessary to make any sale really GREAT. There is no other Sale of its kind that can compare with this IN ANY WAY.

The dresses in this assortment are model garments and surplus stocks from the firms which make some of the smartest gowns worn in America.

The values in this sale will be the talk of Chicago tomorrow. There is everything in this assemblage that a woman of good taste would choose for her afternoon or evening wardrobe.

The big fact that these garments could not be bought today at this price wholesale—or anywhere near it—is not the main point. The facts we wish every woman to remember are that:

1. These Dresses are new.
2. The styles are the latest.
3. The fabrics, trimmings, and workmanship are the most desirable. And perhaps the most important of all is
4. Their beauty—the prettiest, most delightful Dresses and Frocks we have seen in any assortment in many a day.

Being model and sample garments there is almost no end of choice in the styles.

Fabrics include taffetas, charmeuse, gros de londres, serge, crepe de chine, nets, laces, chiffons, etc.

Colors include white, black and evening shades.

Trimmings include spangles, silver nets, and drawn laces, white fur in abundance—muffloon, coney and imitation ermine.

PARCEL POST AND EXPRESS.

THIS IS REGULAR "HOG KILLIN'" weather, and "sausage makin'" time. I make my sausage after the recipe of an old Pennsylvania Dutchman, who has for years supplied Philadelphia folk with as good sausage as could be found. If you want to try it, send me 62 cents—no stamps—and I'll send you a two pound package of it, postpaid. It is made from the flesh of young hogs—not too fat—and is mildly seasoned with salt, sage, and a trace of pepper. Because it is made from the flesh of young hogs only, it is not a greasy, indigestible sausage. It contains no other ingredient than the ones I have named in this advertisement, and there is not better sausage made.

Try it, just once. If you like, we'll arrange to send it to you every week.

92 cents gets you a four pound [live weight] milk fed chicken that is simply delicious; nearly 300 regular customers testify to its qualities. Let me send you one by parcel post. I pay the postage.

A. L. SARRAN, Edgar, Illinois.

JEWELRY, WATCHES, ETC.

EVERY DAY MORE PEOPLE REALIZE the advantage of buying UNREDEEMED diamonds. When you pay, REGULARLY, say, $90 for a diamond, you must first deduct the profit on same to get at the actual value of it. Your diamond is not worth $90; it is probably worth just half that sum; the other half represents the profit of the retailer, cutter, importer, etc.
RIGHT HERE IS THE DIFFERENCE.
We have pawned diamonds left over at such low figures that we can and do save you half on the original price. Call at our store today and make us show you; you will not be pressed to buy. The sale is made when the customer is satisfied.

A REBUILT CADILLAC

It's a Safe Used Car to Buy

SPECIAL VALUES NOW.

A rebuilt Cadillac is superior to any new car at the same price. They are the truest values on the street. By rebuilt we mean that the cars have been taken entirely apart, each part examined, and if necessary replaced by a new part made at the Cadillac factory, the entire car repainted and refinished like new, all equipment put in first class condition—the whole car, in fact, carefully reconstructed until it is good as new in every detail.

We offer Cadillacs exclusively, as we do not accept other makes in trade. Consequently we are as interested in the performance of these rebuilt cars as we are in new Cadillacs. In actual service value these cars are worth a great deal more than we ask for them, and we usually have a variety of body styles to select from. See them before you buy.

WILSON TO URGE CONTROL BY U. S. OF WATER POWER

Conservation Program of Administration Presages a Fight in Congress.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20.—[Special.]—Informal announcement that President Wilson intends to urge congress to pass the administration conservation program, which failed in the last session, indicates that the fight between conservationists and anti-conservationists will be renewed with vigor this winter. The principal measures in the program are the two bills regulating the development of water power sites on navigable rivers and on the public lands owned by the federal government.

In the last congress Chairman Adamson of the house interstate and foreign commerce committee introduced a bill to amend the general dam act governing the granting of permits to construct water power dams over navigable streams. Conservationists opposed this measure, charging that it was inspired by attorneys for the water power trust. They succeeded in having the house pass a substitute.

Provisions of Substitute Bill.

This substitute provided that no more grants in perpetuity should be made to private concerns for the development of water power over navigable streams. It also provided, besides a definite period for development, that the government should have the privilege of purchasing plants at a fair physical value at the end of the period. The developers, under the conservation measure, were also to pay the government a compensation for the use of streams and they were to be subject to government regulation of rates and trade practices.

Under the Adamson measure there would not be so great a government control and there would be little opportunity for the government to purchase at the end of the fixed period, inasmuch as it made allowances for franchise and other rights in addition to physical property.

Fight Over the Ferris Bill.

The other measure in the water power program is the Ferris water power bill, which, if enacted into law, will provide the means for the development of water power sites on public lands by private capital, although under government control.

Already opposition to it has sprung up from two quarters. On one side the public land states of the far west are lined up against it because they believe they should be given exclusive jurisdiction over water power sites within their areas, even if on the public domain. On another side opposed to the measure is the water power trust of the country, which sees in it far more of government control and regulation than it desires.

At the present time water power sites on the public domain are largely undeveloped. Secretary of the Interior Lane believes this situation exists because the only means of developing the sites is through the investment of private capital and there is no means under existing law whereby private capital can be given a fixed time in which to carry out its projects inasmuch as all permits for the development of water power on the public domain at the present time are revokable at the pleasure of the secretary of the interior.

The Ferris bill, which has been approved by Secretary Lane, empowers the secretary of the interior to lease the water power sites for a period not exceeding fifty years to private concerns. At the end of that time the lease may be renewed with the consent of the government, or states, municipalities, or the federal government may take the plants over at a fair valuation of the physical proprty. If not taken over the lessee is to be given preferential rights for another period of years.

During the existence of the leasing arrangement, however, the states in which the sites are located have the right to control rates, services, and the issue of stocks and bonds in intrastate developments where those states have commissions empowered to handle such business.

The great objection which the water power trust has to the Ferris bill is that it provides for a definite period of leasing, at the end of which the plants are subject to conversion at a fair valuation of their physical property.

Points Water Power Economy.

Secretary Lane in discussing the Ferris measure said:

"Water power can do more than any one thing to lower the cost and raise the standard of living; it is the root of agricultural wealth; it is the key to the industrial life of the future, and it is essential to our national defense. The policy of the government toward water power is a matter that affects the welfare of every man, woman, and child in the United States and in which every citizen should take an interest."

According to the secretary through the development of water power Germany has obtained nitrates for the manufacture of its high explosive shells and the nurturing of its soil. The United States and other nations are still largely dependent on Chile for all nitrates.

"Water power," continued the secretary, "means nitrates for our national defense and also for our agriculture; it also means electricity for our industries and for the better economic life of our people."

Sees Great National Problem.

The secretary pointed out that the problem of developing the water power sites of the country properly is one of the greatest confronting the nation. He said that it should be handled by the federal government wherever the federal government has jurisdiction to handle it. There should be no surrender to the states, according to the secretary.

In support of his contention, he stated that in 1913, out of 7,000,000 available horse power, twenty companies controlled 2,710,886 of the developed power and 3,556,500 of the undeveloped, where states have handled the situation. Out of 1,185,400 horse power in the states of California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, and Washington, according to the secretary 1,023,700 are in the control of the large corporations and but 111,700 in the hands of the small.

At the present time there is about 55,000,000 horse power available on public lands. Of this, 28,000,000 horse power is found in the so-called public land states and 42 per cent of the entire amount in forest reserves.

JANITORS SPLIT ON "SLUGGINGS"

New Union Charges 'Roughhouse' Tactics Became Unbearable.

ELECTION BULLDOZING.

There is a split in the flat janitors' union. A dissatisfied faction in the old union has pulled out and organized the Chicago Amalgamated Janitors' union as a protest against alleged slugging and "rough house" tactics of members of the union recognized by the American Federation of Labor.

The new union has been incorporated under the laws of Illinois, and yesterday the officials issued a circular calling upon all wielders of the mop and broom to join the union of "square, clean tactics." Headquarters were opened at 31 West Lake street.

"We Are Here to Stay."

The circular, which is signed by Kaspar Tegen, Carl Scott, Tom Johns, and Louis Braeckelaere, states that the new union objects to violence, stink bombs, and the explosion of boilers as weapons of strike warfare. It reads:

> The Chicago Amalgamated Janitors' union, local 340, is an established fact and is here to stay regardless of the officials of local 14,332. We are well able to master the situation and to protect ourselves against any imposition that we may meet in this our fight of liberty, honesty, and decency in unionism. We stand for the liberty of our fathers in refusing to pay tax to any union which will not permit the right of representation and free speech, the officers of which through conspiracy and fraud have kept themselves in office perpetually; which is against the bylaws of all unions, honor, and justice.
> Never were the janitors under such tyrannical slavery as they have experienced under the misrepresentation of the local 14,332 and we rebel against such administration of a labor union. We do not want any dictators; we janitors claim to have sense and education enough to manage our own affairs and to arbitrate our own grievances with the owners. We don't want any violence committed. We don't want anybody injured. We don't want any houses stinked up and we don't want any boilers exploded. We only want to do our work in a quiet and peaceful manner so that we may be able to procure the things which are necessary for ourselves, our wives, and little children. We don't want to stop the supplies of groceries to tenants in the buildings where we work. We want milk for our own babies and so we don't want our tenants' babies to suffer by cutting off the milk supply.
> And so, friends, this is your battle as well as ours and we want to say this much: When you receive threatening letters to the effect that you will lose your job if you join our organization, come right down to our office, we will take care of you, we are well able—as we said before—to master this situation and to give you full protection. We also appeal to all apartment owners and real estate firms to call at our office for first class and competent janitors.

New Membership 600.

"We have stood for these slugging and rough house tactics for the last two years and we couldn't stand it any longer," said Carl Scott, recording secretary of the seceding union. "We pulled out three weeks ago and now we have over 600 members.

"The best element among the janitors are coming over to us. We don't want the bums and rough necks. The officers of the old union are a set of tyrants who are perpetuating themselves in office for their own benefit.

"The straw that broke the camel's back was the election in September. They bulldozed everybody to vote their way and they took our candidates off the ticket. We can't stand for their dirty work. If a man wouldn't join the union he would have his flat stunk out. We don't believe in that sort of work. We believe men are free to join or not join the union. If a man doesn't want to join our union he doesn't have to."

Scott said several members of the new union have received threatening letters. Attorney Otto Christensen, counsel for the seceders, filed a bill last month for an injunction to restrain members of the old union from interfering with those who quit.

Called Charges "Trumped Up."

Jack Sullivan, financial secretary of the old union, said the charges made by the seceding faction are trumped up. He said the trouble grew out of the election, in which the officers of the seceding union who ran against the old officers were defeated.

"We don't practice slugging or stinking up of houses," Sullivan said. "Tegen, Scott, and their crowd are sore because the election went against them. Our organization is recognized by the Cook county real estate board. We have 3,700 members and 5,000 agreements with employers."

The old union is a so-called "federal labor union," of which Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is international president.

MORE PRESSURE IN WHEAT MART; RECEIPTS LARGE

Prices Drop as Export Call Slackens; Sharp Reaction in Coarse Grains.

The wheat market was under pressure during most of the session yesterday. Cables were indifferent, coming unchanged to ½d lower, and the favorable weather conditions northwest, with big receipts in all directions, were depressing influences, especially as there was but little outside buying demand. Futures at the close were 1⅛@1⅜c lower.

Several of the leading commission houses that have been bullish for some time turned to the bear side and were advising sales. The reasons for the shifting of sentiment was the letup in the export call, uncertain conditions in the ocean carrying trade, and prospects for continued heavy receipts, with more rapidly accumulating stocks. Southwest reports indicate a movement of wheat the largest since harvest, with receipts limited only by the supply of cars.

Country Deliveries Heavy.

Country marketings in the northwest have doubled the last few days, according to some reports, and the cash demand was reported slower, although premiums were not much changed. Heavy selling of durum wheat at Duluth reflected the withdrawal of Italian line boats, and New York reported shippers having Greek vessels chartered were not inclined to load at present, due to the uncertainty connected with the attitude of Greece. With the further requisitioning of Italian boats, the export situation was regarded as less satisfactory.

Primary receipts were again over 1,000,000 bu larger than a week ago, and for the week they were 17,955, compared to 13,443,000 bu a year ago. Kansas City expects over 500 cars Monday, and the cash trade there was slow, much wheat being carried over unsold. St. Louis and Omaha also had big receipts.

Big Receipts Northwest.

Northwest receipts were nearly as large as a week ago at 1,358 cars and exceeded those of last year by 411 cars. Minneapolis stocks increased 140,000 bu for one day and at Duluth there was an increase of 1,278,000 bu, in spite of the heavy shipments, which were nearly 2,000,000 bu yesterday. It is expected there will be heavy shipments from Duluth up to the close of navigation.

Clearances for the day were 583,000 bu. Local cash sales were 10,000 bu. Prices were not much changed relatively. Liver- was unchanged to ½d lower. Local receipts were 134 cars. The Canadian forecast was for generally fair weather except for local snow flurries. Weather in our grain belt will continue cool and unsettled.

Corn Demand Less Active.

The demand for corn futures did not come up to expectations and prices worked sharply lower, closing ½c to ⅝@⅞c for the day. Profit taking was a factor and bears were more aggressive, encouraged by the weakness in wheat, the better weather conditions, with no response in Liverpool prices, which were unchanged. The cash demand was slow, with prices steady and sales of 50,000 bu. There were rumors of some new corn sold for export, but no confirmation was received. Receipts were 208 cars, with 832,000 bu in the west, compared to 1,016,000 bu a year ago. Clearances for the day were 27,000 bu. Country advices were mixed.

Oats Show Weak Tone.

Oats followed the trend of other grains. Prices at the close were ½@⅝c lower. The cash demand was tame, with sales of 75,000 bu. Nothing new was reported in regard to export trade conditions in the east. Sample prices here were steady relatively. Receipts here were moderate at 110 cars, but primary arrivals were liberal, 966,000 bu, compared to 657,000 bu a year ago. For the season to date primary receipts of oats have been 119,000,000 bu, compared to 125,000,000 bu a year ago.

Hog products were easy, packers being credited with selling, while local traders were bearish owing to the prospect of heavy receipts of hogs the coming week, 190,000 being estimated for the week with 59,000 for Monday. Prices at the yards were 10@15c lower. Western receipts for the week were 615,600, compared to 533,000 the previous week and 539,000 a year ago. The cash trade was fair.

Rye Dull and Weak.

Rye was quiet and easy. No. 2 sold at 98c and No. 4 at 90c. Receipts were 17 cars.

Barley ruled firm, with sales of spot malting at 60@67c; feed, 58c; and screenings, 49@55c. Malting to arrive sold at 64@70c, and 25,000 bu were taken for export. Receipts, 83 cars.

Timothy seed was quiet. March closed at $8.75 and cash lots at $5.00@8.00. Clover seed was easy, with cash lots at $10.00@19.50 nominal.

Duluth flax closed ¼c lower to 1½c higher. Cash on track, $2.03@2.03½; November, $2.02; December, $2.01¼; and May, $2.05. Receipts, 93 cars. Minneapolis was ½c lower, with cash on track $1.98¼@2.02¼; receipts were 49 cars. Winnipeg closed ⅛@¼c lower. November, $1.82¾; December, $1.82, and May $1.85⅝. Receipts, 19 cars.

NEWS AND GOSSIP OF BOARD OF TRADE.

Local exporters reported a slow eastern call for wheat. No. 2 hard wheat was offered in store at around December price for shipment east without meeting any buying response. Southwest reports were extremely bearish. A lot of wheat was carried over unsold Friday at Kansas City, while export bids were out of line, and between 500 and 600 cars were expected Monday. St. Louis and Omaha also are getting big receipts, compared to last year, and country elevators in the west and southwest are said to be well filled with wheat. One leading Kansas City cash man predicted the biggest receipts of wheat at Kansas City on crop the coming week if cars were available. The only check to the country movement southwest appears to be the lack of cars. Northwest markets and Winnipeg prices were a little easier. Local sales were 10,000 bu.

"The stocks of old lard are moving at a little better rate, and some of the stock has gone into new hands, but the sale of old lard at a discount allows the new to accumulate," said W. L. Gregson.

"Interest in the futures is seasonably increasing and a fair amount of the hedging is noticeable on the advances. For the next week we ought to get more hogs in Chicago than last year, but the river markets are not yet in the full winter swing and they may be a little below last year, but probably over last week."

A new development in the ocean freight situation was the report that shippers who had Greek boats chartered were in no hurry to load them, pending developments in the Balkans. Should Greece enter the war on the side of Germany the Greek steamers would be interned wherever possible while the Greek boats afloat would doubtless be seized by the allied fleets. The phase of the situation, with the further requisitioning of Italian boats, tended to restrict business.

Primary receipts of wheat were a little smaller than the previous week at 17,955,000 bu, but were much larger than a year ago, when they were only 13,443,000 bu, which was then regarded as an unusually big run for the time of year. Corn receipts for the week were 4,331,000 bu, against 6,081,000 bu a year ago, and oats receipts for the week were 7,286,000 bu, compared to 4,710,000 bu a year ago.

Minneapolis wired Logan-Bryan: "After close of navigation think we will see a rapid accumulation here, as expect the enormous cash and flour demand to let up soon. There are signs that the edge is off now. The Chicago buying, which has been the backbone to the strong demand here, seems to be satisfied. But little new business is being worked."

There were reports of some business for export in new crop corn. There were reports that some business had been done. Exporters' views were mixed in this regard. One prominent exporter wired from the seaboard: "Foreigners will not bid for No. 3 corn, as they fear the quality."

Sincere & Co. had the following from a leading miller in north central Ohio: "Farmers generally deny holding grain of any kind, but when we send a man to buy hay and he gets a peep into their granaries he finds a wonderful amount of wheat in their hands. They all have in mind the $1.50 paid last year and believe they will receive the same price for their last crop."

Clement-Curtis estimate there has been a loss of 175,000,000 bu wheat this year, on account of the bad weather. They estimate the crop of winter wheat of milling grade at 450,000,000 bu and say their reports show a loss of 17 per cent in the acreage of winter wheat.

Argentine cables reported a good export demand for new crop wheat. Seeding in United Kingdom is about finished, and country offerings of wheat were reported larger. Seeding is delayed by drought conditions in the Punjaub district of India.

Minneapolis wheat stocks increased 140,000 bu for the day. For the week Duluth increased 1,278,000 bu. It is expected the lakes will show a big increase for the week.

The cash demand for corn was moderate. Prices were not much changed. Oats were about steady relatively. Shipping sales were 50,000 bu corn and 75,000 bu oats.

Estimated receipts for Monday: Wheat, 134 cars; corn, 208 cars; oats, 110 cars; rye, 17 cars; barley, 83 cars; hogs, 59,000 head. Hogs for all next week, 150,000 head.

A board of trade membership changed hands yesterday at $3,200 net to the buyer. It is understood three memberships have sold at that figure the last week.

Reports from Witt, Ill., to Bennett said that yields of corn in that section were beyond all expectation, in some cases 100 bushels to the acre.

There was a little export business in gulf wheat reported on the break, with some rye sold from outside points, and 25,000 bushels barley.

Duluth reported free selling of durum wheat there, which was ascribed to the withdrawal of Italian boats.

The weather forecast for Canada was for generally fair weather, except local snow flurries.

Minneapolis reported heavy selling of May wheat there yesterday.

Sales to go to store were 200,000 bushels wheat.

Hog receipts of 20,000 head sold 10@15c lower than on Friday for the general run and 25c lower for the light, underweight lots. Pigs opened 25c off for the day and closed at a net decline of 40c. The trade was fairly active at the decline, but prices worked steadily downward and closed at the bottom. Top sales were made at $6.75, with the bulk at $5.90@6.60. Pigs sold at $5.25@5.65.

Final prices left hogs 35@60c lower than a week ago, with the light weights mostly 50c and more lower than at the close last week. The weekly average price of all hogs was pegged at $6.40, the lowest made since February, 1912, and compared with last week's average of $6.80. Receipts for the week aggregated around 217,700 head and were the largest weekly arrivals since last February, while shipments, 40,000 head, were the largest of the year to date.

Average weight of hogs at Chicago this week was estimated at 181 lbs, or the lightest on record. This was attributed to the large proportion of pigs included in the receipts. Pigs finished the week 50@75c lower than a week ago.

CATTLE.

Beef cattle values at Chicago this week closed little changed from those quoted a week ago, having lost substantial gains made earlier in the period. Receipts for the week showed a good increase, but there was a broader demand from outside shippers and the market had a good upturn on the first three days. During the latter half of the week the quality of the offerings was not good enough to attract aggressive outside competition and the near approach of Thanksgiving, with its usual diversion of the consumptive demand from beef to poultry, resulted in a much weaker trade. All earlier gains were lost and the market closed at the low point. A feature of the week's business was the scarcity of fancy beeves and the dearth of sales at $10.00 and better. Most of the week's run of steers was of a class selling at $7.50@8.50, while prime lots were quoted up to $10.30. Cows, heifers, and bulls closed at the low point with steers.

Cattle at six western markets for the week 183,800, against 196,400 the preceding week, 122,500 a year ago, and 163,700 two years ago. Total for 1915 to date 6,325,000, against 5,911,000 the same period in 1914.

SHEEP.

Sheep and yearlings finished the week unchanged to 10@15c lower than a week ago, while lambs showed a net loss of 40@50c for the week. Recessions in values were due to increased receipts and the failure of the outside shipping demand to show expected enlargement. The trade most of the period was in the hands of local packers, whose immediate requirements were not urgent because of liberal reserves in coolers and the nearness of Thanksgiving week, when poultry will replace mutton to a large extent with the consuming public. Lambs topped the week at $9.00 and sheep at $6.10, both classes closing at a discount from the week's best figures.

BUNGALOW ELITE MEETS A TARTAR

Woman Merchant Fights to Save Her Seven by Eight Store.

Miss Clara Dorschel of South Chicago went to see her attorney, Harry Kahn, yesterday. She has stood all she can, she says, and now she is going to get an injunction restraining neighbors from interfering with her business.

For several months Miss Dorschel's little, one story, three cornered notion store at 8137 South Chicago avenue, where she lives alone with her ancient dog, Bessie, has been the object of a fight on the part of the residents of the bankbox bungalows of Benooma Park, a new subdivision.

Offends Bungalow Taste.

The bungalow folk, it is said, don't relish the idea of a notions store in a neighborhood of green lawns and flower gardens. Harry Talcott, a fireman, who lives next door to Miss Dorschel, has organized the opposition and, according to Miss Dorschel, has devoted himself to making life miserable for her.

"He has just been hounding me," said Miss Dorschel. "He has a lot of chickens and when he comes home from his night work he goes out and rouses the roosters so they will wake me up. He sent a fire department inspector once on a report that I had put up a dangerous chimney The inspector said my house was all right."

She Gets a Lawyer.

"I wrote to Judge McGoorty the other day and he advised me to see a lawyer. So that's what I did. I will show them there is some fight in me."

Miss Dorschel is a cripple, having lost one of her legs in a street car accident ten years ago. She worked as a proofreader and stenographer and after several years invested her savings in the triangular lot on which she built her little store and residence. She stocked the shop with a variety of things ranging from shoestrings to bread. The store is a tiny affair, seven feet wide and eight feet deep.

"I've been making a living and sending some money to my 82 year old mother in Pittsburgh, who is my only living relative," she said, "and now they want to run me out. Well, they won't do it without a fight."

CAR LINE CHRISTMAS GIFT, BUT CITY MAY REFUSE IT.

San Angelo, Tex., Likely to Turn Down Offer of Property Worth $100,000.

San Angelo, Tex., Nov. 20.—J. D. Sugg, wealthy citizen here, has offered the entire San Angelo street railway system, valued at about $100,000, to the city of San Angelo as a Christmas gift, according to announcement here today. City authorities are undecided as to whether the gift should be accepted. The car system, it is understood, has been unprofitable for several years.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 20.—Gold reserve of the federal reserve banks increased about $18,000,000 during the last week, according to a statement of the banks' condition Nov. 19 issued today by the federal reserve board.

COFFEE AND SUGAR.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—Business in the market for coffee futures consisted largely of switching from December to later months, but there was also some scattering liquidation of [illegible] selling, while there appeared to be very few buying orders around the ring. The opening was 1@2 points lower and the market sold off to 6.87c for May and 7.02c for December, with the close showing a net loss of 8@9 points. Sales, 14,750 bags; November, 6.71c; December, 6.71c; January, 6.71c; February, 6.71c; March, 6.72c; April, 6.76c; May, 6.82c; June, 6.86c; July, 6.91c; August, 6.96c; September, 7.01c; October, 7.06c. Spot quiet; Rio No. 7, 7.34c; Santos 4s, 9¼c. No change was reported in the cost and freight situation. The official cables report an advance of 1-32d in Rio exchange on London, with the Rio market 75 reis higher and Santos unchanged. Brazilian port receipts 88,000 bags; Jundiahy, 40,000. Victoria reported a clearance of 9,000 bags for New York.

Buy Chicago Municipal Bonds.

Why do you not invest part of your accumulated savings in Chicago municipal bonds? They yield 4 per cent or a little more, and enjoy the highest market standing of any municipal bonds that are sold. If you decide to invest part of your savings account in these bonds, your banker will get them for you, and you can thus increase the interest return of your money without decreasing the safety of the principal.

Cook county bonds sell on a slightly higher level than city obligations. There were about $250,000 of county 4 per cent bonds in the hands of local houses last week, offered for sale at par. Many of them have been sold.

Bond houses had $100,000 to $200,000 of Chicago city obligations, which they offered last week at an average price of 99⅞. There were also south park bonds for sale at 99⅝, and $500,000 west park obligations at an average price of 99½. An issue of northwest park district 4½s was on sale at prices to yield 4¼ per cent. This week the prices have been raised slightly, making the income yield 4.2 per cent.

Sanitary district bonds usually sell on a basis to yield about the same income. The district is preparing to issue a $2,000,000 4 per cent loan about Dec. 1. Bids have not yet been received, and it is not known at just what price these bonds will be offered to investors.

Bond issues of all these local taxing bodies have been passed on by the Supreme court, and there is not the slightest question about their validity. Backed by the power to levy and collect taxes, the bonds are not subject to the vicissitudes of ordinary investments. Taxes must be paid in periods of business depression just as in times of prosperity.

These bonds have the further advantage of fluctuating very little in market value, and if the investor chooses early maturities he is practically guaranteed against any appreciable change in current quotations.

Millions of dollars' worth of Chicago municipal bonds are held in the east and some in the far west as permanent investments. By absorbing these local issues Chicago investors will not only be getting the choicest bonds on the market but they will be backing the credit and financial standing of their home city.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

E. M. W., Milwaukee, Wis.—The stock of the Pennsylvania is in a stronger position than that of most railroads because of the relatively small bonded debt and the fact that there are no preferred shares. Earnings in 1913 were equal to 8.86 per cent on the stock, in 1914 6.83 per cent. In the first half of this year gross earnings were less than in the corresponding months of 1914, but such economies were made that net showed an increase. In recent months gross has shown an increase and net a large gain. Six per cent dividends have been paid since 1900, except in 1906, when 6½ was distributed.

Westinghouse Air Brake.

A. V. G.—The report of the Westinghouse Air Brake company for the year ended July 31 last tells of poor business in railway supplies, but of the prospect of profits from an $18,000,000 order for shrapnel and cartridge cases. Net earnings were $1,575,839, compared with about $3,500,000 the year before and $6,000,000 the year before that. The regular cash dividends of 16 per cent were paid on the $19,638,467 of stock. This dividend was more than half earned, the rest being paid out of surplus, reducing that to $4,390,342. The company has paid cash dividends at rates varying from 12½ to 45 per cent during the last twenty years and stock dividends amounting to more than 300 per cent.

American Railways.

E. S. S., Joliet, Ill.—The American Railways company has outstanding $6,713,150 of common stock of $50 par and $2,000,000 preferred of $100 par. There is also a bonded debt of $9,757,500. Preferred dividends of 7 per cent have been paid since that stock was issued in October, 1912, the last payment being 1¾ per cent this month. On common stock the first quarterly dividend was 1 per cent in December, 1900. The rate was raised to 1¼ per cent quarterly the next year and then to 1½, which was paid till September, 1914. In December, 1914, 1¼ per cent was paid, and this rate continued in March and June. On Sept. 15 last a dividend of only 1 per cent was paid and 1 per cent will be paid next month.

Brief Answers.

W. M. C., Fort Wayne, Ind.—The Farmers' National Life Insurance company began business early in 1913. At the end of 1914 the surplus it had collected by sales of stock at a premium was gone, and its paid in capital stock, amounting to $161,573, was impaired $3,374. Heavy management expenses and high cost of new business caused the shrinkage. The company wrote $1,337,250 of insurance in 1914, and had $1,717,750 in force at the end of the year.

W. A. S., Springfield, Ill.—Sears, Roebuck & Co. common stock is subject to fluctuations of dividend rate and market value as sales fluctuate. Thus far fluctuations have all been upward, giving steadily increasing earnings. At the present market price of the stock the income return is less than 5 per cent.

H. A. M., Minonk, Ill.—The American Tobacco company has outstanding $40,242,400 of common stock and $52,761,200 of 6 per cent cumulative preferred. It pays 20 per cent a year on the common, and this is the stock which is quoted daily. Earnings in 1914 were only a little more than enough to cover the dividend.

BULL UNDERTONE, BUT NO SIGN OF JUMP IN PRICES

War Issues Lose and Gain Intermittently, Making a Guess Market.

The market closed the week with rather uncertain sentiment in commission offices as to the probable course of prices at the opening tomorrow. Following the jar which bull sentiment received about ten days ago there has been a revival of buying, most pronounced, it must be said, in the war issues, which still have a hold on the public. They are the most active shares on the list, and while they may fall away 10 or 15 points in a few days they have been reacting and recovering generally the larger part of the losses.

This kind of market affords an opportunity for guessing and with profitable results in the event of fair "luck." The market is without any decided tendency. On breaks the advice generally is to buy. Commission houses do not foresee, therefore, any pronounced movement in price, though, as has been the case for months, the undertone remains bullish.

Curb List Higher.

The local unlisted securities market continues active with a firm undertone throughout. American Chicle common sold at 97. Avery & Co. common changed hands at 70, and is in demand at that price. The preferred sold at 98. Butler Brothers declined from sales at 346 to 340, closing with light offerings at 342. Consumers' Company preferred has been strong at 80 to 82, while the common changed hands at 24. Emerson Brantingham preferred sold at 51 and the common at 16. Oxweld Acetylene has been very firm with the bid advancing to 106, with light offerings.

Kellogg Switchboard and Supply company stock advanced 15 points to sales at 390. Inland Steel advanced about 25 points to sales as high as 335. Moline Plow preferred was wanted at 89½, ex-dividend. A steady inquiry advanced the bid price of National Grocer common several points, to 92, while the preferred is in demand at 93. United States Gypsum preferred sold at 102, ex-cash and stock dividend. Sulzberger & Sons preferred was a trifle easier, being offered at 88¾. Reo Motor Car sold at 55 and Reo Motor Truck at 22.

Chicago Utilities Active.

Chicago Utilities have been in good demand, the bonds advancing from 40 to 65; preferred stock changed hands at 7½; common advanced from ¾ to 2½. By-Products Coke Corporation has been rather inactive, selling around 132. Public Utilities securities continue to advance on very good buying. American Public Utilities preferred sold at 66. Cities Service common and preferred, after a sharp advance, reacted slightly to sales at 90 on the common and 78 on the preferred.

Federal Sign System Electric common sold at 13; Middel West Utilities common, 39½@41½; preferred, 77 ex-dividend, to 79 ex-dividend. Tricity preferred, 93; United Light common from 40 to 45, closing 44 bid, 46 asked; preferred from 73 to 74¾, closing 74 bid, 75½ asked; Standard Gas common, 8½.

Bank Share Quotations.

A firm undertone continues in the bank stock market, although few actual transactions are taking place. A steady demand for Continental and Commercial National has advanced the bid price to 275, with little stock offered under 280. Recent reported sales are as follows: Continental and Commercial National, 276; Central Trust Company of Illinois, 215; First National, 470; Standard Trust and Savings, 160; Garfield Park State, 132.

PRICES WEAKEN IN WAR SHARES

Oil Stocks Strong in Dull Market; Specialties Are Under Pressure.

Total sales of stocks, 328,000 shares.

Total sales of bonds (par value), $2,055,000.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—Weakness in war stocks and kindred specialties, which later spread to some of the more stable issues, characterized the light dealings of today's short session. Some losses were largely retrieved before the close, while oil stocks were strong, with a gain of over ten points for Texas company at 203.

At their extreme declines such stocks as Bethlehem Steel, Studebaker, Willys-Overland, and Baldwin Locomotive were from four to ten points under yesterday's close and coppers also were backward, regardless of a further advance in the metal to 19¾.

United States Steel reflected pressure of the same character recently noted, and rails in the investment division were a point or more down. Short covering rectified this condition in part toward the end, but the close was irregular.

Trade Expansion Reported.

The day's budget of news included reports confirming earlier advices of general trade expansion and a wider distribution of most classes of merchandise. Betterment also is reported in bank collections, with an increased demand for money.

Indications point to another advance in most finished products of the steel mills, and it is confidently predicted that high grade coppers will cross 20c during the coming week, with correspondingly higher quotations for lead, spelter, and similar products. Several of the Standard Oil subsidiaries announced a further rise in prices of oils.

Instead of the large gain in cash which local banks were expected to show on the week's business, a nominal decrease was reported, with virtually no change in actual reserves.

Bonds were fairly firm during the week, showing more or less independence of the movement in stocks.

United States bonds and Panama issues were higher by ¼@1 per cent on call during the week.

IN FOREIGN STOCK MARKETS.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Money was in better demand and discount rates were steady today. American exchange was weaker and the appearance of several buyers caused cable transfers to drop to 4.69⅝. The stock market finished weak, dull, and uninteresting, and even rubber shares failed to respond to a further rise in the raw material. A few foreign bonds and home rails were marked, while treasury bills changed hands in the money market fairly freely. American securities lacked support and dropped below parity. A Valuable Fee Simple
INCOME
ZINC PROPERTY
No Mining Risks to Take
The purchase in fee simple of proven or producing zinc land in the Joplin district is a difficult matter, some of such property being held as high as $10,000 an acre. To close a partnership estate we offer for $40,000 cash a tract of 50 acres of proven mineral land located in one of the very best developed sections of this field.
One of the largest operating companies in the district, owning an adjoining tract upon which it has been operating a 500 ton mill for nearly 10 years, recently leased 20 acres of this land after proving up the ore body by drilling, and is now coming into it underground with a face of ore nearly 700 feet wide and 10 feet high; the first heading, some 60 feet wide, being already over the line. It is estimated that within five months this face will be over the line its entire width and yielding royalties of more than $2,000 a month. Another 10 acres (unleased) east of the leased ground has been proved by eight drill holes in ore, and 15 acres on the west by 12 drill holes, and shaft all in ore, and now ready for a mill. The remaining five acres have never been drilled. A 500 ton mill on the developed 15 acres, costing approximately $30,000, would now yield a royalty income to the land of about $1,000 a week and an operating profit of approximately $2,500 a week. Purchasers of the 50 acres could either operate or lease out this portion of the ground; also the east 10 acres.
Every facility for a thorough examination will be afforded and further information sent to responsible inquirers upon request.

While there was nothng of a spectacular character in the week's real estate market either in point of magnitude, or as evidencing sensational advances in values, as was the case during the previous week, the market nevertheless made a good showing, although the trading was not on such broad lines as during the preceding week.

Thus, the downtown district was without representation in the week's business, and there was a lack of the several important transactions in manufacturing property which were one of the conspicuous features of the previous week's market, but any shortcomings in these respects were probably more than compensated for by the large increase in the number of important building projects announced as well as in the much better showing made in outside business property as compared with the previous week.

There also was more of an important character doing in apartment house property, while the aggregate of the week's trading, as indicated by the figures of the recorder's office, showed a marked increase over the corresponding week a year ago.

Improved Undertone.

This larger movement of property is also evidenced by the increased volume of the abstract and guarantee business of the Chicago Title and Trust company, which for the last month shows an increase of about 30 per cent over the corresponding time a year ago and is a measure also of the generally improved undertone of the market, evidenced by the growing feeling of optimism which is steadily, if somewhat slowly, replacing the pessimism which has prevailed to a greater or less extent for the last two years. Its growth has been particularly noticeable during the last month or six weeks. Not but that there are a good many who still are inclined to regard the future outlook as a rather discouraging one, but their number is much less than it was two months ago.

The interesting thing about it is that it is not born of any greatly increased activity in the market as measured by the volume of really important and significant transactions. The downtown sales market is still exceedingly slow, the renting situation in this district is far from good, and the market as a whole is largely of a trading character, but despite this there is a growing feeling that the market is on the upgrade and that unless something unforeseen happens there is a strong probability of a really good market by spring, which may possibly develop into an exceedingly active one.

Plenty of Idle Money.

This feeling undoubtedly is largely due to a gradual realization of the tremendous and rapidly increasing economic strength of the country, and to the belief that from it there is every reason to believe that widespread business activity and prosperity must finally come.

The glut of idle money—greater now than ever before in the history of the country—is always the precursor of a period of great speculative activity, and real estate in prosperous communities, where value conditions are sound, has always been favored in movements of this kind.

There is reason to believe that in the present world crisis it will more than ever before command the attention of capital. It may be that matters will not turn out this way, but there are a great many shrewd students of economic conditions who are looking for it.

Wade Purchases Mystify.

Because of the mystery surrounding it, much interest has been aroused, particularly by near by west side owners and operators, by the two recent purchases of Festus J. Wade, president of the Mercantile Trust company of St. Louis. Week before last he acquired for $70,000 the property at the southwest corner of Polk and Canal streets, which was supplemented last week by the purchase from V. E. Ackerburg of the property adjoining at 515-519 West Polk street, 75x118 feet, for an indicated consideration of $45,000. It is improved with a one and two story building, for many years occupied by the Hallett Foundry company.

This purchase makes a little over 16,000 square feet which Mr. Wade has taken title to for a total consideration of $115,000. It is stated he is not acquiring the property for any of the west side railroads, as was at first reported, but for a private concern, which will improve as soon as arrangements can be made for switch track connections. Harry Goldstine & Co. were the brokers in both transactions.

RUSH STREET CORNER SOLD.

An interesting transaction closed late in the week was the sale of the property at the northeast corner of Chicago avenue and Rush by W. H. Barrett to Chester A. and Raymond C. Cook, trustees for the indicated consideration of $72,000, subject to $24,000. The lot is 73.9x70½ feet, and is improved with a four story apartment building of seven rooms, having a gross annual rent of about $6,400.

Two New Homes; Apartment Building Favors Children.

The Odell residence is on Warrick road, near Kenilworth avenue, and is a modern designed home representative of the western trend in residence architecture. The exterior treatment is red-brown oriental brick laid with wide sienna colored joint. The roof is of mottled red brown tile. On the first floor are a large living room, reception hall, dining room, and kitchen. The rooms are arranged on an axis in order to obtain vistas through the interior. Four large bedrooms and two bathrooms are on the second floor, the servants' quarters on the third floor.

The Stevens residence is on Kenilworth avenue and Essex road. The exterior is a soft red texture brick laid up in white joint, the tile roof being of a soft green color. The arrangement of the rooms is practically the same as in the Odell residence. There is also a lounging and billiard room in the basement.

Regarding the lower building, a three apartment building of six rooms and two baths, with sleeping porches and sun parlors, at 5446 Cornell avenue, the interesting statement is made that children were the first consideration when the building was planned for Mrs. B. R. Caldwell by Architect Lewis E. Russell. In the large English basement a big room has been set aside for the youngsters who may live in the building. It will be suitably decorated and equipped. There will be a sandpile and a gymnasium.

BROADWAY LOT CHANGES HANDS

Property at Thorndale Avenue Corner Bought by Frank O. Magie.

There was a fairly good movement of outside business property last week, one of the most interesting of the transactions being the sale by the Thorndale trust agreement to Frank O. Magie of the property at the northeast corner of Broadway and Thorndale avenue for an indicated $70,000, subject to $30,000. The lot is 75x100, improved with a two story brick on the corner with four stores and flats above and two stores on the Thorndale avenue frontage. White & Tabor and Walter H. Wilson & Co. were the brokers.

Lake Street Sale.

In connection with this transaction, the same brokers have sold for Mr. Magie to John M. McVoy the property at the northeast corner of West Lake and Jefferson streets, which Mr. Magie had given in exchange. A consideration of $40,000 is indicated by the revenue stamps on the deed. The lot is 32 2-3x140 feet, improved with a two story brick store and loft building.

Mary E. Ryan and husband, P. J., have sold to Gustav, John T., and W. T. Argeris et al. the property at the northeast corner of Cottage Grove avenue and Sixty-first street, lot 90x65 feet, with a row of five one story stores, for an indicated consideration of $30,000, subject to an incumbrance of $18,000. William J. Burke was the broker.

Newspaper Is Purchaser.

The property in Sangamon street, fifty feet south of Adams street, lot 100x125 feet, west front, with old improvements of no value, has been sold by Percy Q. Cook to the Chicago American for a reported consideration of $36,625, subject to an incumbrance of $11,000. The grantee now has a holding of 225 feet on both Sangamon and Peoria streets and will improve the property just acquired with garage and automobile repair shop. Sidney W. Golden represented Mr. Cook in the transaction and Leo Price the American.

NORTH SHORE REALTY ACTIVE DURING WEEK.

Lake Forest and Evanston furnished the two principal acre deals of the week.

The Lake Forest transaction was the sale by Michael H. Redmond to Thomas and Michael Byrne, contractors, of a tract of 160 acres on Deerpath road, about three miles west of Lake Forest, for a reported consideration of $50,000. The property, which is on the south side of the road, adjoins the Ogden Armour country estate on the west, and is the last unsold piece along the road in that vicinity. It is stated the Byrnes will have the property handsomely landscaped, one feature being an artificial lake, and will erect attractive residences.

In the Evanston acre deal the Central Trust company, trustees, conveyed to Fred W. Brummel and Frank A. Case a tract of about thirty-four and one-half acres, bounded by Howard street on the south, Mulford street on the north, Ridge boulevard on the west, and Custer avenue on the east, for an indicated consideration of $155,000.

One acre was also acquired from Adam J. Kaspar for a reported $7,500, making a total of $162,500. The purchasers gave back a part purchase money mortgage for $105,000, three years, at 6 per cent. The tract comprises 288 lots, and it is stated that about $75,000 worth of Howard street frontage has already been sold to different parties.

Street improvements are now going in, and it is planned to construct a number of high grade three apartment buildings. The property is four blocks from the Howard street station of the Northwestern elevated road and is three blocks west of Clark street. Clark & Trainer were the brokers.

Ira C. Baker, vice president of the Marquette State bank, has purchased from Joseph F. Connery a tract of twelve acres, excepting the streets on the ridge between Western, Lothair, and University avenues, and One Hundred and Sixteenth and One Hundred and Eighteenth streets, for a stated consideration of $15,000, giving back a part purchase money mortgage for $10,000. Several of the lots were sold before the new owner secured his deed.

EXTRACT COMPANY BUYS HALSTED ST. PROPERTY.

The only transaction of moment in factory property was the purchase by the North Branch Extract company, a subsidiary of the Gries-Pfleger Tanning company, from A. G. Becker, trustee, of the property on Halsted street, 275 feet south of Rees street, and the holding on Hawthorne avenue, 300 feet southeast of Rees street, for an indicated consideration of $81,000.

The first parcel has an east frontage of 175 by 145 feet on the north and ninety-six feet on the south, and the second parcel fronts southwest 175 feet, by 153 feet on the north and 106 feet on the south.

The property is improved with three buildings, one of which is two stories in height and the others three stories.

Leases and Loans.

There was considerable doing of an important character in leases and loans last week. One lease negotiated by E. F. Keebler & Co. was of special interest for the reason it disclosed the fact that John R. Thompson was the real purchaser of the leasehold interest in the property at 212 South State street, which supposedly was acquired by Albert Pick. The lease, negotiated by Keebler & Co., covers the store and runs from Thompson to the Joseph Brown Jewelry company at an annual rent of $12,000, the right being reserved to cancel in the event of the construction of a new building. It is stated that Mr. Pick took title for Mr. Thompson for the reason that Mr. Thompson owns a long term ground lease of the adjoining twenty feet, which would have affected the price had it been known he was a bidder for the property.

This gives Mr. Thompson a holding with a frontage of forty feet. No plans as to improvements have yet been decided upon, but it is intimated that something definite will be worked out in the near future. Keebler & Co. negotiated the original ground lease from the McCormick estate to Thomas McGinnis at annual rents of $9,000 to $10,000, McGinnis paying $10,000 cash for the building.

The Press club has leased the top floor of the City Hall Square building on Clark street, opposite the county building. The space required is about 6,000 square feet, and the lease is for five years from Jan. 1, at a term rent of $24,000, or $4,000 a year for the first two years and $5,333 for the rest of the term. The club is also given the privilege of the roof, on which it plans a picturesque garden. It also may terminate the lease at the end of three years.

The mortgage loan market was featured by two $500,000 loans, one being by the University of Chicago on west side property at 5¼ per cent.

The loan was made by Charles L. Hutchinson, representing the University, the borrower being Francis Beidler. It runs five years and is secured by the property at the northwest corner of Washington boulevard and Desplaines street, lot 60x130 feet, with one story brick building; also the property at the southwest corner of Washington and Union street, lot 150x191 feet, with five story brick warehouse building, and other property. It is said to be a renewal of an existing loan.

The other loan was a serial bond issue loan of $500,000 by S. W. Straus & Co. to the Standard Varnish Works, Inc., of New York. The loan is payable from one to ten years and bears 6 per cent interest. It is secured by the property of the company at the southwest corner of Twenty-sixth and Federal streets, 97x400 feet, improved with a two story factory building; also the property at the southwest corner of Thirty-seventh and Shields avenue, 165x600 feet, improved with a two story factory building; also a plant at Staten Island, N. Y., and one at Toronto. It is stated the loan is for the purpose of increasing the working capital of the company. The corporation was founded in 1880, and the Chicago branches were established in 1880. The Chicago plants are valued at $275,000 and the others at $625,000.

O. H. Haugan is trustee in a loan of $100,000, five years, at 6 per cent to John S. Holmes, secured by the property at the southeast corner of Wilson avenue and Malden street, 92x140 feet, with the Malden Arms building.

The Central Trust company is trustee in a loan of $105,000, five years at 6 per cent, to A. P. Callahan & Co., by Harvey Stickler, president, secured by the property at the southeast corner of La Salle and Twenty-fourth streets, 590x115 feet, west front.

Greenebaum Sons Bank and Trust company report having made recent loans aggregating about $800,000.

The firm of Young & Johnson, prominent north side operators, has dissolved. W. G. Young will continue the business at Wilson avenue and Broadway, while Robert C. Johnson will on Dec. 1 open a general brokerage office in the Otis building, suite 1050.

Baer, Eisendrath & Co. have opened a mortgage and investment business in the Continental and Commercial National Bank building. Mr. Baer has been engaged in the business for many years, while Mr. Eisendrath is a member of the firm of Strauss, Eisendrath & Co., now retiring from business.

Prince Louis Ferdinand. The German Emperor. Prince Wilhelm.

This is a favorite photograph of Emperor Wilhelm II. of Germany and the two oldest children of Crown Prince Frederick Wilhelm and Crown Princess Cecile. The child who, if he lives, will some day be the German emperor, is at the kaiser's left. He is Prince Wilhelm Frederick Francis Joseph Christian Olav. He was born in Marmor palace, Potsdam, on July 4, 1906. The other child is Prince Louis Ferdinand Victor Edouard Adalbert Michel Hubert, and he was born in Marmor palace, Potsdam, on November 9, 1907. The crown prince has two other sons, Prince Hubertus, six years old, and Prince Frederick, four years old, and a daughter, born April 8, 1915, while the crown prince was at the front. The future crown prince, like the present crown prince and the kaiser before him, will assume the title Wilhelm. He will be the fourth Wilhelm since the founding of the empire. The kaiser's shortened left arm bearing the wrist watch is obvious in this picture.

A crown prince who may never reign. Crown Prince Alexander of Serbia, who was recently wounded in a battle with the Bulgarians, has, since the first move of the great Austro-German-Bulgarian drive into his country, seen his chances to become a monarch greatly lessened. He was once a suitor for the hand of Grand Duchess Olga, eldest and loveliest of the czar of Russia's daughters, and was "turned down." He is 27 years old and is commander of the Serbian army.
